The covenant is central in the implementation of the faith which constituted Israel's response to the Exodus. It is the symbol that describes the relationship in which Yahweh and his people stand to one another. In various parts of the Old Testament different aspects of this relationship are stressed. Sometimes the covenant is seen mainly in the historic actuality of revelation at the Exodus and in the founding of Israel as the people of God. Sometimes the abiding and even the unbreakable character of the relationship is stressed. At still other times the demands conceived by Israel to be incumbent upon it in this relationship—the laws, the statutes, and ordinances—are made virtually synonymous with the covenant (Deut. 4:13). In general the prophets, when they utilize the metaphor to describe the relation of God to Israel, stress the theocentric, dynamic, and personal aspects of the relationship. Legal and priestly movements, however, stress its institutional, statutory, and static aspects. The eighth-century prophets, with the possible exception of Hosea, do not utilize the concept at all, probably because the notion that Israel has a claim upon God, which they combated, was too closely associated with the idea of the covenant at that time.

The Hebrew word for covenant, berith, has the significance of bond or agreement. The etymology of the word is not certain. The meanings of "cutting," "binding," and "eating"—all associated with covenant making—show the variety of opinions as to the primitive meaning of the word. For the religious purpose it served in Israel the term was borrowed from social usage. In social practice covenants were of two general kinds. There were covenants between equals, in which the obligations and privileges under the agreement were equally shared. It seems that under the foreign influence of the nature mysticism, so central in Canaanite religion, Israelites increasingly conceived of their covenant with Yahweh as such a covenant between equals, in which God was as dependent upon Israel as Israel was upon him. Thus in the covenant relationship Yahweh had in effect forfeited his own freedom. This was a growing assumption against which the prophets protested. But in social relationships there were also agreements, known as covenants, between partners not equal: for example, between a king and his subjects, or between a lord and his servants (cf. II Sam. 5:3). In such a covenant the core of the agreement is really a promise or gift made by the stronger party. This is, however, normally conditioned upon certain demands or obligations to be met by the weaker party. In any case, the promise, central in such a covenant, does not destroy the freedom of him who gives it. Such is the form of the covenant of Sinai. The essence of the covenant is the promise of God, backed by the gift of deliverance already given, that Israel will be his special possession and instrument. The promise depends on the faithfulness and obedience of Israel.

The account of the theophany, the offer of the covenant to the people, and the final sealing of the agreement in a sacred meal is given in chs. 19 and 24. Two units of legal material break the continuity of this account: the Decalogue (20:1-17) and the Covenant Code (20:22-23:33). The position of these two items seems to indicate that those who placed them in the middle of the account of the covenant-making ceremony intended that these laws be understood as the specific obligations laid upon Israel as a part of the covenant relationship. It is improbable that any of these items in their present form was the original statement of Israel's obligation in the relationship. Certainly it is virtually impossible that all could have been integrally a part of the covenant from the first. But their present position stresses the fact that it is characteristic of large sections of the Old Testament, notably the Deuteronomic, to conceive of the covenant as a law. Whether Israel's obligations under the covenant were specified from the first is disputed. Martin Buber,²⁶ for example, takes the view that, originally, stipulated conditions formed no part of the covenant at all. In any event, it becomes impossible to say with certainty what the first detailed form of Israel's obligation as a covenant member may have looked like. The ordinances for the regulation of the cultus, beginning at ch. 25, are presented as having been communicated to Moses, but stand outside the account of the forming of the covenant. This is characteristic of the P strand to which they belong. P seems to have thought of the Sinai covenant as only a renewal of the Abrahamic covenant. Further, the law was not an integral part of the covenant but rather a sign of it and a means of entering into it. The so-called ritual decalogue (34:10-26), though not placed in this major account of the sealing of the Sinai covenant, is nevertheless thought of as integral to it.

X. The Decalogue

The growing conviction among critical scholars that Moses was actually a historic figure of heroic proportions, who not only delivered the Israelites from slavery but founded them as a self-conscious community of Yahweh, has reached virtual unanimity. That Israel's obligations under the covenant promulgated by Moses were specified from the first, probably in written form, is also generally recognized as possible, or even probable. Moses may have produced a "book of the covenant" even though, as we have seen above, such a law did not originally bulk so large in the total significance of the covenant relationship as was true in the later Deuteronomic period. But with this, agreement ends.

²⁶ Moses (Oxford: East & West Library, 1946), p. 103.

There is no agreement that we possess today, in specifiable form, whatever legislation Moses may have promulgated or interpreted as representing Israel's social or cultic obligation under the covenant. Those who do think we possess this Mosaic legislation disagree as to where it is to be found. Until a relatively recent date it was most commonly looked for in the so-called "ritual decalogue" (34:10-26). Today it is more commonly felt that it is to be found in a larger or smaller "core" of the Decalogue (20:1-17). And all along there have been some, not many, who have maintained that the Covenant Code (20:22-23:33), or some part of it, must constitute the original Mosaic legislation.²⁷

If anywhere, the specific forms of Moses' legislative work will be found in the Decalogue. But while it is possible that actual formulations of Moses are still preserved there, it does not seem probable. And as matters now stand, it seems virtually impossible that we shall ever be able to demonstrate conclusively any hypothesis about this problem. It is certain that the abiding structure of Israel's faith, resting on the historic exodus revelation, was provided through the work of Moses; but it does not seem likely that we shall ever be sure about the social or cultic prescription in terms of which that structure was given its precise definition and content in worship and society during the first centuries of Israel's existence.

Both the Covenant Code (20:22-23:33) and the Decalogue give the impression of having been inserted in the JE document. This is especially true of the Decalogue. Since in it God addresses the people directly, one would expect it to begin after 20:21. Even so it would interrupt the narrative. Conceivably, a briefer form of the Covenant Code is an original part of the JE narrative.²⁸ But both on text-critical grounds and in terms of the history of Israel's religious development one is almost forced to the conclusion that the insertion of these units occurred in the Deuteronomic era. This does not mean that they are therefore of Deuteronomic provenance; indeed, this is certainly not true in the case of the Covenant Code. But it does destroy the presumption in favor of their great age. It is not possible to say that the burden of proof is upon those who hold that the Decalogue is not of Mosaic origin. The whole matter is open.

²⁷ A picture of this uncertainty, and of some of the efforts to get beyond it, can be obtained by consulting and comparing such books as Beer, Exodus, pp. 96-125; Aage Bentzen, Introduction to the Old Testament (Copenhagen: G. E. C. Gad, 1948), II, 52-59; Julius Bewer, The Literature of the Old Testament (rev. ed.; New York: Columbia University Press, 1940), pp. 30-42; Driver, Exodus, pp. 191-251, 413-17; Walther Eichrodt, Theologie des Alten Testaments (3rd ed.; Berlin: Evangelische Verlagsanstalt, 1948), I, 25-39; Otto Eissfeldt, Einleitung in das Alte Testament (Tubingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1934), pp. 240-51; McNeile, Exodus, pp. xxxviii-lxiv; Meek, Hebrew Origins, pp. 49-81; Sigmund Mowinckel, Le décalogue (Paris: Félix Alcan, 1927; "Études d'histoire et de philosophie religieuses"); R. H. Pfeiffer, Introduction to the Old Testament (New York: Harper & Bros., 1941), pp. 210-32; Rowley, Re-discovery of O.T., pp. 116-23; Ernst Sellin, Introduction to the Old Testament, tr. W. Montgomery (New York: George H. Doran, 1923), pp. 40-48.

²⁸ McNeile, Exodus, p. lxii.

We must also notice that the Decalogue differs greatly from the Covenant Code both in form and function. The Covenant Code, like its successor the Deuteronomic Code, is an instrument for the concrete and comprehensive regulation of a society in its civil and religious dimensions. Its so-called profane laws are in the form of case law. They rest on concrete precedents. They can be applied and/or expanded to cover new situations. The cultic sections of the code are in the nature of regulative rubrics. They too are concerned with details and specific problems. The Decalogue is different. It is rather a statement of general principles in terms of which such laws as one finds in the Covenant Code are to be understood and administered. The "ten words" are not the outcome of or applicable to any concrete social or cultic situation. The Decalogue has something of the flavor of a "bill of rights" in which, in general terms, the prerogatives of all—God, parents, fellow Israelites—are recognized. The Decalogue cannot function in a society except indirectly, by means of an instrument such as the Covenant Code. The Decalogue, whenever it may have been devised, presupposes the existence of such an instrument. It is actually a summary and interpretation of it. And, as authoritative summary and interpretation, it provides the spiritual climate in which the actual social instrument is administered and continues to develop. It is in this respect, rather than in its "ethical emphasis," that the Decalogue plays an entirely different role from that of the "ritual decalogue" (34:10-26). The latter, whether it is envisioned as a fragment of the Covenant Code,²⁹ or whether it is held to be the nucleus from which the Covenant Code grew,³⁰ is of the same genre as that code. The Decalogue is different. It is not a social instrument concerned with details; it is a comprehensive epitome seeking to set forth the inner meaning and purposes of all actual laws.

If the Decalogue is the interpretation of the Code of the Covenant as we now have it, it cannot be of Mosaic origin. Even those most anxious to find in this code a nucleus of Mosaic origin³¹ agree that both in its cultic and civil preoccupations the Covenant Code is the instrument of a settled agricultural community. If the Mosaic authorship of the Decalogue is to be seriously proposed it must be on the assumption that it is the epitome of a social and cultic legal instrument now no longer extant. As judge Moses may have had a hand in the development of such an instrument, and the Decalogue would represent his reorientation of it. But he would hardly have composed such a common custom de novo, for such a comprehensive social instrument is a slow growth, deeply rooted in the mores of the people. McNeile³² has shown that there is an affinity between the Decalogue and the Covenant Code which would make it possible to treat the former as an epitome of the latter. But the connection is too general to make this necessary. That Moses actually summarized and interpreted whatever laws and customs by which under him Israel ordered its life seems highly probable, for such summarization would represent a reorientation of the inner meaning of the common life in terms of the covenant. But whether this probable interpretation of Moses is actually preserved in the Ten Commandments remains an open question. As Gressmann³³ said, "the demands of the religion of Yahweh were at various times summarized in a variety of decalogues." He felt that 20:1-17 was the first in this series and was done by Moses. Perhaps it is safer to say that Moses began the series. That the Decalogue of 20:1-17 represents that beginning must be admitted as possible, despite some serious difficulties (cf. Exeg. on 20:4, 8); but it cannot be admitted as certain or even very probable.

It should be added that the slightly different duplicate of the Decalogue in Deut. 5:6-21 offers no real help in arriving at the problem of dating the unit in its original form, for the variations all concern acknowledged additions. This is also true in the case of the Nash Papyrus, a Hebrew text of the Ten Commandments and the Shema, which is probably older than the second century A.D.

XI. The Laws of the Covenant

The Covenant Code is the Hebrew cultic and social code in its most primitive extant form. As has been noted above, 34:14-26 is probably a fragment of this code. All subsequent "codes," beginning with Deuteronomy, are expansions of it. It is called the Covenant

³¹ Rudolf Kittel, Gestalten und Gedanken in Israel (Leipzig: Quelle & Meyer, 1925), pp. 334-40.

³² Exodus, pp. lxi-lxii.

³³ Mose und seine Zeit, p. 473.

²⁹ Eichrodt, Theologie des A.T., I, 25.

³⁰ Pfeiffer, Introduction to O.T., p. 211.

Code because it is set within the context of the account of the sealing of the covenant.

Though we call it a code, it is not a single structure: 20:21-26 and 23:13-19 consist of cultic provisions, and it is generally felt that the latter section is more recent than the former or than the rest of the code.³⁴ Further, 23:20-33 does not consist of laws but of a hortatory farewell address emphasizing the rewards that will come from observing the laws. This leaves a central block of "civil" and "criminal" law (21:1-23:12), which must also be divided into two sections. The latter (22:20-23:12) shows a strong religious orientation which is missing in the former. This has led some to conclude that 21:1-22:19 is the oldest section of the code and that 22:20-23:12 stands under prophetic influence.

It is almost certain that the code was developed in Palestine. Behind it lies the social practice of an agricultural society. As they settled down in Palestine, the Israelites incorporated these forms of social control into their own pattern of life. They also assimilated them to the covenant relationship in which Israel stood to Yahweh. The Covenant Code is an excellent illustration of the assimilative capacity of Israel's faith.

The Covenant Code, as a separable unit in the book of Exodus, was first isolated by Goethe. Of all the codes of the early Near East it is the only one that has played until today a continuous role in the cultural process. Less than a century ago it was the only one known to exist. Then the discovery of others—the Code of Hammurabi of ancient Babylon, the Assyrian Code, the Hittite Code, and the Hurrian laws—demonstrated that in the development of its social institutions and laws ancient Israel was organically related to the whole process of cultural forces in the midst of which it grew up. The meaning of the assertion that biblical religion is historical in character was given a much fuller significance when it was discovered that the social forms of the religious community which enshrined a unique faith were, sociologically speaking, of a piece with the forms of every other culture.

The relation between the Covenant Code and the Hammurabi and other ancient codes is an indirect one. There are no verbally parallel laws. Not a single law in the Covenant Code is an exact duplication of a law in the older Code of Hammurabi. The Hebrew legislators were unconscious of their dependence upon their Babylonian predecessors. The Covenant Code developed in Palestine in an environment long permeated by Babylonian cultural influences. At least in so far as its Israelite history is concerned, this development took place after the Babylonian Code as such, which had made its impression on Palestinian society, had disappeared from the scene. There was a time, shortly after the discovery of the Code of Hammurabi, when comparisons of it with the Covenant Code were made chiefly for the purpose of establishing points of literal dependence. Today there is a more comprehensive and constructive tendency which seeks to treat each code, including also the Hittite and Assyrian, as the index to the spirit and structure of a whole society, thereafter comparing the full impression that emerges from each. When this is done we soon discover that the Code of Hammurabi was the instrument of a much more complex society than the Covenant Code. It indicates a society in which the commercial interests far outstripped the agricultural, in which society was rigidly stratified, the professions highly self-conscious and controlled by a completely centralized government. A complex economy had been carefully standardized and was under state control. The Covenant Code talks about a pastoral and agricultural society, still largely tribal in its structure. There is a lack of differentiation based on social caste or professional calling. The family and the local community have not yet given way to an all-pervasive central government. The possibility that this code was initially sealed by Joshua at Shechem (Josh. 24:25), as has been frequently suggested, can hardly be ruled out. Its provisions may have served Israel's society at least until the rise of the Davidic empire.³⁵

³⁴ Eissfeldt, Einleitung in das A.T., p. 245.

XII. Religious Significance of the Tabernacle

The priestly ordinances for the cultus stand outside the context of the promulgation account of the covenant at Sinai. This is significant, for it points to the very distinctive theological outlook of the priestly writers. The account of the sealing of the covenant is provided by JE. The Covenant Code and the Decalogue stand within the context of this account as the conditions for its maintenance undertaken by Israel. The Deuteronomists probably set them in this context (see pp. 842-43), for it was with the Deuteronomists that the correlation of covenant and law reached its climax. The law became the substance of the covenant and bore its title. The tradition that the two tables of stone on which the laws were inscribed were placed in the ark was perhaps of Deuteronomic origin; at least it was most strongly emphasized by Deuteronomists. For them the ark, especially as the receptacle of the law, was the heart of Israel's cultus.

³⁵ See English translations of the Code of Hammurabi and of the Hittite and Assyrian codes in J. M. Powis Smith, The Origin and History of Hebrew Law (Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1931); Ancient Near Eastern Texts, ed. James B. Pritchard (Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1950).

In Solomon's Temple, as earlier in Shiloh, and probably in the wilderness, the ark had been the symbol of God's constant presence with his people. It was the mark of his nearness and immanence. At times this seems to lead almost to an identification of Yahweh and the ark (Num. 10:35-36; I Sam. 4:5-11). Solomon built his temple because, as he put it, God resolved to dwell in a place of utter darkness (I Kings 8:12-13), and the ark was established in the most holy place as the heart of Solomon's Temple. It and the temple itself stressed the immanent and abiding presence of Yahweh in Israel's midst. The Deuteronomists refine and moralize this Presence by equating it with the law. They also conceptualize the notion of God's presence by coining for it the phrase "the name of Yahweh." Thus the temple was no longer the dwelling for Yahweh but for his "name" (I Kings 8:17; etc.). The actual Presence of an earlier era is thus attenuated. Nevertheless, the ark and the first temple remain throughout the symbols of the divine immanence, summed up in the covenant, the tables of the law (I Kings 8:21).

The priestly writers did their creative work during and immediately after the Exile. The movement they called forth lost its ascendancy to the rabbinical movement initiated by Ezra. Its day was brief. But these priestly writers offered a radically different central focus for the interpretation of Israel's cultus from that of the Deuteronomists who preceded them or the rabbis of "normative Judaism" who followed them. It is possible to sum up the original and distinctive contribution of the priestly movement to Israel's religious history by saying that the starting point for its interpretation of the cultus was not the immanence of God but his majestic transcendence.⁸⁶

In Exodus this priestly interpretation of the faith and its cultus is given in the accounts of the instructions for and the erection of the tabernacle and its equipment. Ever since the days of Wellhausen it has been commonly recognized that the tabernacle of Exodus is an ideal structure. The temple of Solomon was its structural model. But was the temple also the primary source of inspiration for the concern which moved the priestly writers with respect to the meaning of the cultus? What, religiously speaking, was the point of this imagined tabernacle? Was it simply, as Wellhausen supposed, designed to establish the notion that the cultus as practiced in the first temple had been so ordained by Moses and had been performed in substantially the same way from the first? Or did these priestly writers have a more forward-looking constructive concern? They probably did. They wished to combine the meaning of the tent (33:7-11) with the very different symbolic significance of the ark of the first temple. Thus, in terms of its religious significance, the tabernacle represents an attempt at a synthesis of the experience of the God of Israel as transcendent and as immanent. The ancient tent was primarily a symbol of the experience of Yahweh in his transcendent majesty. Since this attempt at a synthesis is in part a reaction against the immanentist and legalistic-moralistic tendencies in Deuteronomy, the priestly movement stresses strongly both God's sovereign transcendence and the redemptive character of the relationship in which he stands to his people. While the first temple serves as a structural model for the tabernacle and its equipment, the ancient tent of meeting was the primary source for its inspiration and meaning.

As in the temple, the ark in the tabernacle stands at the very heart of the structure; in the instructions for the erection of the tabernacle (chs. 25-31) the ark is treated first, despite the fact that the historical ark probably no longer existed when the account was written. This is characteristic of the effort to absorb everything in the new interpretation. That the novelty is very real becomes apparent as soon as we compare the role of the ark in the tabernacle with that of the ark in the temple or in Deuteronomy. In the tabernacle it is no longer the tables of the law in the ark, or even the ark as such, but the mercy seat with the attached cherubim on the ark that is the significant feature. The ark is indeed "the ark of the testimony," the symbol of the law; but it is from above the ark and its mercy seat that the majestic God of Israel, the transcendent ruler of all existence, will meet with and commune with the priestly representative of Israel, even as he communicated with Moses in the tent (25:22). It is, moreover, not by means of Israel's observance of the law but through the atonement wrought by the annual sacrificial blood on the mercy seat that Israel's relation to God is maintained. In contrast to the moralistic legalism of both Deuteronomy and the later "normative Judaism," the priestly movement develops Israel's faith as a religion of grace. All too soon this priestly emphasis was eclipsed in its public influence by the book-centered moralism of the rabbis. The latter retained the cultus in its priestly forms, but more and more reduced its meaning to a legal observance.

⁸⁶ Gerhard von Rad, "Zelt und Lade," Neue Kirchliche Zeitschrift, LXII (1931), 476-98, is a pioneer in this modern rediscovery; cf. Eichrodt, Theologie des A.T., I, 197-221.

In P's interpretation of the cult the covenant of Sinai becomes insignificant. The laws committed to Moses are the testimony; they no longer constitute the covenant (25:21). For P the covenant is no longer "a mutual relationship between Israel and Yahweh, albeit not between equals" (see p. 841). The covenant consists of God's eternal decree disclosed in creation and in Israel's election. The latter P associates with Abraham rather than with Moses and Sinai. The relationship in which all mankind and Israel, each in its own way, stand to Yahweh is a preordained and lasting relationship. God sets up the covenant; it is his covenant (Gen. 17:7). Man's freedom, also Israel's freedom, is seemingly limited by this rather static apprehension of the transcendent role of God. The relationship tends to become trans-historical and mystical in character.³⁷ The cultus of the tabernacle, with emphases of separation, continuity, symmetry, and perpetual identity, sets forth the stable relationship presupposed by the P writers who developed it. The cultus as well as the laws are not the substance of the relationship, but a means of declaring it. The nature of the relationship Yahweh alone can determine.

XIII. Place of Exodus in the Bible and in Christian Faith

In the Old Testament Exodus has a role comparable to that of the Gospels in the New Testament. Its focus is the historic event on which the community of Israel was built. It is a book of faith. It assumes that Israel's escape from slavery, and its establishment as a people, is the event of revelation. It assumes that God's disclosure of himself in this event was decisive and definitive. Consequently, it treats Israel's experience of the meaning of this event as the key to the meaning of all existence. All of this is true of the entire Old Testament. What is distinctive about Exodus is that it focuses upon this event of revelation in terms of its historical actuality by recounting the remembered incidents of the emancipation of Israel and its establishment as a community, at the same time exalting the revelation which, to faith, was mediated through these.

The central moment in God's activity disclosed in the exodus event as attested in Exodus is power. Yahweh is Lord. He vanquishes the Pharaoh and the gods he represents, as well as the powers that can dispose of demonic forces.

³⁷ Eichrodt, op. cit., I, 206-9.

This notion of power, freedom, and sovereignty, first illustrated in this book and in the event it celebrates, becomes a persistent apprehension in the framework of biblical faith. Later interpretations of God's nature and will which stress his justice, forgiveness, love, and compassion always do so on the prior assumption of his power. However, already in Exodus this power of God is affirmed as expressing itself in responsible and moral intention. The God of Exodus has a purpose, a plan. The content of this plan scarcely rises above the limits of Israel's possession of Canaan in Exodus. But the apprehension of God's activity as intentional persists to express itself finally in the most comprehensive expositions of Christian eschatology. The moral character of this intentional activity Exodus illustrates by treating the social-moral standards of Israel's common life, the Decalogue and the Covenant Code, as an expression of God's own moral activity.

Exodus is not a history in the modern sense. It is the history of the birth and establishment of a historic faith. It combines historic memory, notably remembered aspects of the primary event of revelation, with Israel's present living experience. Thus it seeks to bear witness to the faith by which Israel lives. It is not concerned to provide the facts relating to the Exodus and to Israel's establishment as a community for the purpose of a scientific reconstruction of the past. Its real concern is not with the past but with the present. But this "present" contains Israel's whole history and has its roots in a very particular past. It was at a certain time and in a certain place that God revealed himself and that Israel became his people. Exodus assumes that through this particular event, and the community of faith it evokes, there is mediated the saving insight into the meaning of existence. The whole Bible affirms this historic particularity in respect to revelation. In the New Testament this particularity is moved to the Christ event, and yet retained. The whole Bible insists with Exodus that the meaning of creation is seen by the light of redemption. It is the unique role of Exodus to deal directly with those historic incidents in relation to which this faith was first expressed.

Exodus has inextricably interwoven the affirmation that the character of God was disclosed in the historic exodus with the belief that his intention and will were expressed in the founding of the Israelite community. This corresponds to the apprehension, characteristic of the whole biblical view, that the revealing activity of God, in its decisive and saving depth, is both historical and elective in nature. "Historical revelation," in the biblical sense, entails a church. It can be affirmed only from within this church in which it expresses itself, for it is affirmed in faith. On the other hand, this church or community of faith is not held together simply by a common life or by common principles and practices. It is held together by the remembrance and celebration of the particular historical event which it affirms as the event of revelation. In Exodus Israel is "a kingdom of priests and a holy nation" (19:6) only in the context of the living experience that God had led it out of Egypt. So also in the New Testament and in Christianity the church cannot be "the community of the faithful" unless it is also "the body of Jesus Christ." In the Old Testament it is primarily the book of Exodus that provides, celebrates, and insists on this historical basis which is both the distinctive feature and the offense of the Bible and of Christian faith. Exodus serves especially as a shield which protects the biblical community from being swallowed up by some nonhistorical, universal system, whether mystical or rational. Exodus provides a record of the framework of faith in which the prophets spoke and in relation to which they must be understood. This is true even though parts of Exodus as literature are chronologically postprophetic.

EXODUS

XIV. Outline of Contents

- I. Preamble (1:1-22)
 - A. Israel in Egypt (1:1-7)
 - B. Israel enslaved (1:8-14)
 - C. Prelude to Moses (1:15-22)
- II. Preparation for deliverance (2:1-7:13)
 - A. God provides for a leader (2:1-25)
 1. Birth and adoption of Moses (2:1-10)
 2. Moses discovers his people (2:11-15)
 3. Moses in exile (2:16-23a)
 4. The covenant with Abraham (2:23b-25)
 - B. The JE account of the call and commission of Moses (3:1-6:1)
 1. The vision (3:1-6)
 2. The audience (3:7-4:17)
 - a) The Lord's plan (3:7-10)
 - b) God instructs Moses (3:11-22)
 - c) Moses taught magic (4:1-9, 17)
 - d) Aaron as spokesman (4:10-16)
 3. Moses returns to Egypt (4:18-31)
 - a) Departure from Midian (4:18-23)
 - b) Circumcision of Moses (4:24-26)
 - c) Aaron meets Moses (4:27-31)
 4. Moses confronts the facts (5:1-6:1)
 - a) The Pharaoh scorns Yahweh (5:1-5)
 - b) Pharaoh retaliates (5:6-14)
 - c) The foremen appeal to Pharaoh (5:15-21)
 - d) The surrender of faith (5:22-6:1)
 - C. The P account of the call and commission of Moses (6:2-7:13)
 1. God discloses his plan (6:2-9)
 2. The inadequacy of Moses (6:10-13, 28-30)
 3. The genealogy of Aaron and Moses (6:14-27)
 4. The appointment of Aaron (7:1-7)
 5. The equipment of Moses and Aaron (7:8-13)
- III. God reveals his power (7:14-18:27)
 - A. God multiplies signs, wonders, and plagues (7:14-11:10)
 1. The pollution of the Nile (7:14-25)
 2. Frogs (8:1-15=Hebrew 7:26-8:11)
 3. Gnats (8:16-19=Hebrew 8:12-15)
 4. Flies (8:20-32=Hebrew 8:16-28)
 5. Cattle plague (9:1-7)
 6. Boils (9:8-12)
 7. Hail (9:13-35)
 8. Locusts (10:1-20, 24-26, 28-29)
 9. Darkness (10:21-23, 27)
 10. Death of the first-born announced (11:1-10)
 - B. Yahweh takes possession of Israel (12:1-13:16)
 1. Passover (12:1-14, 43-49 [P])
 2. Unleavened bread (12:15-20; 13:3-10)
 3. Passover (12:21-28 [JJ])
 4. Death of Egypt's first-born (12:29-32)
 5. Sudden departure (12:33-36)
 6. Israel sets out from Egypt (12:37-42)
 7. Dedication of first-born (13:1-2, 11-16)
 - C. Yahweh's victory emancipates Israel (13:17-15:21)
 1. From Succoth to Etham (13:17-22)
 2. Crisis at the frontier (14:1-14)
 3. Israel crosses the sea (14:15-22)
 4. God destroys his enemies (14:23-31)
 5. Hymns in praise of Yahweh (15:1-21)
 - a) Song of Moses (15:1-18)
 - b) Song of Miriam (15:19-21)
 - D. The pilgrimage to Sinai (15:22-18:27)
 1. The crises (15:22-17:16)
 - a) Marah (15:22-27)
 - b) The manna (16:1-36)
 - (1) Institution of the sabbath (16:22-30)
 - (2) The memorial manna (16:31-36)
 - c) Massah=Meribah (17:1-7)
 - d) The Amalekites (17:8-16)
 2. Jethro visits Moses (18:1-27)
 - a) The sacrificial meal (18:1-12)
 - b) Appointment of judges (18:13-26)
 - c) Departure of Jethro (18:27)
- IV. Sinai: the implementation of the Revelation (19:1-40:38)
 - A. The covenant (19:1-24:18)
 1. The theophany (19:1-25)
 - a) The invitation (19:1-8)
 - b) The preparation (19:9-15)
 - c) The appearance (19:16-25)
 2. The Decalogue (20:1-17)
 3. The people's fear of God (20:18-20)
 4. The laws of the covenant (20:21-23:33)
 - a) Two cult laws (20:21-26)
 - (1) The unity of God (20:21-23)
 - (2) The altar (20:24-26)
 - b) The social code (21:1-23:19)
 - (1) Title (21:1)

THE INTERPRETER'S BIBLE

- (2) Civil and criminal laws (21:2-22:17)
 - (a) The Israelite slave (21:2-11)
 - (b) Capital offenses (21:12-17)
 - (c) Noncapital crimes (21:18-32)
 - (d) Laws securing property rights (21:33-22:17=Hebrew 16)
- (3) Moral and religious laws (22:18-23:9)
 - (a) Capital offenses (22:18-20)
 - (b) Humane and pious duties (22:21-31)
 - (c) The spirit of justice (23:1-9)
- (4) A church calendar (23:10-19)
 - (a) The sabbaths (23:10-13)
 - (b) The great festivals (23:14-19)
 - c) A farewell exhortation (23:20-33)
- 5. The ratification of the covenant (24:1-18)
- B. The P ordinances for the cultus (25:1-31:18)
 - 1. The offering (25:1-9)
 - 2. The ark (25:10-22)
 - 3. The table (25:23-30)
 - 4. The lampstand (25:31-40)
 - 5. The tabernacle (26:1-37)
 - a) The tent (26:1-14)
 - b) The wooden structure (26:15-30)
 - c) The veil and the screen (26:31-37)
 - 6. The brass altar (27:1-8)
 - 7. The tabernacle court (27:9-19)
 - 8. Oil for the lamp (27:20-21)
 - 9. The priesthood and its dress (28:1-43)
 - a) Introduction (28:1-5)
 - b) The ephod (28:6-12)
 - c) The breastpiece (28:13-30)
 - d) The robe of the ephod (28:31-35)
 - e) The diadem, turban, and coat (28:36-39)
 - f) The garments for Aaron's sons (28:40-43)
 - 10. The consecration of priests (29:1-42a)
 - a) The presentation (29:1-9)
 - b) The sin offering and burnt offering (29:10-18)
 - c) The sacrifice of installation (29:19-36a)
 - d) The great altar (29:36b-42a)
 - 11. Conclusion (29:42b-46)
 - 12. Late additions (30:1-38)
 - a) The altar of incense (30:1-10)
 - b) The poll tax (30:11-16)
 - c) The brass laver (30:17-21)
 - d) The holy oil (30:22-33)
 - e) The incense recipe (30:34-38)
 - 13. Appointment of Bezalel and Oholiab (31:1-11)
 - 14. The sabbath (31:12-17)
 - 15. Conclusion (31:18)
- C. Moses and the restoration of the covenant (32:1-34:35)
 - 1. The golden calf (32:1-35)
 - a) The people's apostasy (32:1-6)
 - b) Moses' first intercession (32:7-14)
 - c) Moses the prophet (32:15-24)
 - d) The Levites (32:25-29)
 - e) Moses' second intercession (32:30-35)
 - 2. The promise of God's presence (33:1-23, 34:5b-9)
 - a) Departure from Sinai (33:1-6)
 - b) The tent (33:7-11)
 - c) God reveals himself to Moses (33:12-23; 34:5b-9)
 - 3. The renewal of the covenant (34:1-5a, 10-35)
 - a) Preparation (34:1-5a, 10-11)
 - b) The laws (34:12-28)
 - c) The transfiguration of Moses (34:29-35)
- D. The execution of the cult ordinances (35:1-40:38)
 - 1. The sabbath (35:1-3)
 - 2. The offering (35:4-29)
 - 3. Bezalel and Oholiab (35:30-36:7)
 - 4. The tabernacle (36:8-38)
 - a) The tent (36:8-19)
 - b) The wooden structure (36:20-34)
 - c) The veil and the screen (36:35-38)
 - 5. The ark (37:1-9)
 - 6. The table (37:10-16)
 - 7. The lampstand (37:17-24)
 - 8. The altar of incense (37:25-28)
 - 9. The hallowed incense and oil (37:29)
 - 10. The brass altar (38:1-7)
 - 11. The brass laver (38:8)
 - 12. The tabernacle court (38:9-20)
 - 13. Summary of offerings (38:21-31)
 - 14. The priesthood and its dress (39:1-31)
 - a) Introduction (39:1)
 - b) The ephod (39:2-7)
 - c) The breastpiece (39:8-21)
 - d) The robe of the ephod (39:22-26)
 - e) The diadem, turban, coat, and garments for Aaron's sons (39:27-31)
 - 15. The presentation of the tabernacle (39:32-43)
 - 16. The assembly of the tabernacle and its equipment (40:1-33)
 - 17. Conclusion (40:34-38)

XV. Selected Bibliography

- ALBRIGHT, W. F. From the Stone Age to Christianity. 2nd ed. Baltimore: Johns Hopkins Press, 1946.
- BEER, GEORG. Exodus, mit einem Beitrag von Kurt Galling. Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1939.
- BUBER, MARTIN. Moses. London: East & West Library, 1946.
- DRIVER, S. R. The Book of Exodus ("The Cambridge Bible"). Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1911.
- GRESSMANN, HUGO. Mose und seine Zeit. Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1913.
- MCNEILE, A. H. The Book of Exodus ("Westminster Commentaries"). London: Methuen & Co., 1908.
- MEEK, THEOPHILE J. Hebrew Origins. Rev. ed. New York: Harper & Bros., 1950.

EXODUS

TEXT, EXEGESIS, AND EXPOSITION

*The Book of Exodus.—Some books can be read in half a dozen different ways. Books are like music. One can listen to a symphony idly or technically or sentimentally or religiously; while thinking of something else, or while attempting to re-create the mood of the composer. In great books the riches remain inexhaustible, ready for another reading. Such books grow in meaning with the growth of one's own powers of perception. One can read Exodus for the stories it contains, or for its hidden meanings. One can try to unravel its many threads, and guess at its varied authors or ages. One can even read it homiletically in search of good texts, though this method is apt to defeat its own end. Good texts are generally suggested to one who reads for the interest of the material rather than to one who is on a search for texts.

Exodus is one of the most complicated books in the Bible when one begins trying to distinguish between the different versions of the stories and the corrections and amplifications of old material by later hands. It has been said of England that it is to the visitor really a picture book. It is old now, and some of its pages are missing, and many of those that are left are torn and spoiled. Some of its ancient monuments have been restored by later hands in accordance with what they considered better ideas, and much that we would have treasured has been allowed to disappear by those who did not think it was important or interesting.

When you read Exodus you are listening to many voices of people in different places and times, retelling, correcting, misunderstanding, or inserting material which would give historical precedent for their doctrines and which they would like to believe recorded events which must have taken place. You sit around a kind of campfire listening to the evening storytellers. As one finishes his tale, another says, "Well, that is not exactly the way my grandmother told the story. She said. . . ." You sit beside the old scribe who tries for the first time to reduce into a semblance of unity what has passed from mouth to mouth for centuries. You sympathize with the godly priest who sees as he writes that this story does not give credit enough to Aaron or the priests of the day, and so adds a touch of what he feels certain must have occurred. This is true of all history. Christopher Lloyd wrote of Napoleon: "I fancy . . . that more books have been written about Napoleon than about any other single person in history. . . . History is rewritten to suit the needs of the age. . . . Facts become overlaid with commentary."¹

Some people have not faith enough to believe that God could reveal so much of his wisdom and truth through folk who were often as fallible and biased as we are. But to see how it happens, and with what grand result, is very comforting to us who do not consider ourselves perfect and yet hope that in some way we too may "fain be to the Eternal Goodness, what his own hand is to a man."² For the glory of the gospel is that it manifests itself in every life except in that which claims to be inerrant and literally inspired in every detail (cf. Luke 13:24-27). We see in Exodus how much of the goodness and glory of God shines through the very fallible men whose work it is.

There are those who will ask, "How can one stand up and proclaim, 'Thus saith the Lord,' if the Bible is full of mistakes?" This is exactly what the Lord in Exodus knew Pharaoh would say. It is the heathen point of view which prompts the question. The answer to the question which the Lord anticipated Pharaoh would ask, "Can you show a miracle to prove you are speaking for your God?" would be, "Your own heart should bear testimony enough to you that no one has any right to treat fellow human beings as you are treating my people." But there was no use talking to Pharaoh like that. He would not understand such language. The Egyptians were much impressed by what seemed to be strange and supernatural phenomena as evidence of divine power (as long as they could not understand how they were produced). So the Lord taught Moses and Aaron some "signs" in order to get the attention of the ignorant man.

¹ The Listener, XLV (1951), 495.

² Theologia Germanica (Boston: J. P. Jewett & Co., 1856), p. 29.

*Pp. 849-51 include the expositor's introduction. Text and Exegesis begin on p. 851. Editors.

It is one of the relics of our heathenism, this longing we have for some tangible evidence that will clearly indicate the will of God. We would like an infallible church, or an inerrant book, to tell us just exactly what we should do. But "this kind goeth not out but by prayer and fasting" (Matt. 17:21). God works now as he did in the composition of the Bible—through fallible men. He has made us so that we can clearly recognize his voice when we hear it. That is the long lesson taught by moral effort and religious devotion. How did Moses know it was the voice of God that spoke to him out of the burning bush? He knew because it had in it the same accent of the Holy Ghost which he had as a child learned to recognize in the lives of the great saints of the past, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. He knew because it voiced the same deep sympathy which he himself had felt for down-trodden people. He knew because it called him to give himself on their behalf. It needed no voucher to prove that it was the voice of God. "I am the God of thy father"; "I know the sorrows of my people"; "Come now, therefore, and I will send thee." So can one stand up and say, "Thus saith the Lord." The proof that a Bible text is the word of God is that it is the testimony of all the saints of all ages, that it appeals to the deepest and best in every hearer's heart, and that it assigns each one his post in the army of the Lord.

When a prophet declares, "Thus saith the Lord," we find sometimes (as is also the case with the Supreme Court of the United States, or both houses of Parliament assembled) that he is wrong, and that he is corrected by some later and more considered decision. "Ye have heard that it was said by them of old time, . . . but I say unto you" (Matt. 5:21-22). This is one of the reasons why the Bible seems so alive as we read it: the understanding of God in it grows with the centuries. After the caste of professional clergymen or priests had come into being, we frequently find that they were apt to confuse the will of God with the particular ritual which they happened to favor. Customs which had the sanction of long usage were often declared to be of divine origin and given the same pious emphasis as were the weightier matters of the law, justice, mercy, and faith. Every religion gathers such accretions which are apt to be regarded as being equally important with religion itself, if not more so. There is a famous story of an old Scottish Presbyterian elder who, hearing that burglary, arson, and murder had taken place in a neighboring parish, said, "Things are going from bad to worse; if we do not repent, we shall have sabbathbreaking next."

The Decalogue, to cite but one example, is given in Exodus in two forms, that in ch. 34 being concerned with ritual matters entirely. Note the Tenth Commandment: "Thou shalt not see the kid in his mother's milk" (34:26). This commandment is perhaps due to the ancient belief that milk drawn from a cow remains in such vital connection with the animal that any injury done the milk will sympathetically be felt by the cow. James C. Frazer³ gives many instances among many peoples of such a belief. To the priest who framed this Decalogue, such a prohibition may have seemed as important as that about stealing or killing. It is therefore put directly into the mouth of God.

Nor have we rid ourselves even yet of this type of confusion. Turn on the radio some Sunday and hear voices proclaiming in God's name similar commands. If any one should insist on making some inquiry into them, he would be deemed an enemy of God. They must be accepted. Many churches have at least one such rule, viz., "We are the true church. God has spoken to us. We represent him on earth."

But a conviction is valid only if it tolerates public discussion. In Exodus one sees how the ancient rules and regulations, believed in one generation to be given by the direct voice of God, were in another generation discussed and discarded and replaced by more vital, more humane, more religious precepts. Compare the Decalogue in ch. 34 with that in ch. 20. One contribution which democratic ways of thinking have made to religion is the conviction that the pronouncements of religion, even those which are said to be divine commandments, are subject to modification in view of man's growing knowledge of God. Much of the power of ritual seems to lie in its antiquity, perhaps rightly so; but it is also true that ritual precepts are the first to come under the scrutiny of each succeeding generation. The question as to whether or not Christ gave certain exclusive religious powers to a historic caste of self-perpetuating officials for all time, entirely independent of their Christian character, is in our view subject to free discussion; even as most of the ritual commands of Exodus must justify themselves to us on grounds other than that of their supposed divine origin.

Ritual is a means, not an end. One has to discover what the people who framed it were aiming at. Some writers, for instance, explain the commandment against seething a kid in its mother's milk by showing that flesh boiled in

³ Folk-lore in the Old Testament (London: Macmillan & Co., 1918), Part IV, ch. ii.

1 Now these are the names of the children of Israel, which came into Egypt; every man and his household came with Jacob.

- 2 Reuben, Simeon, Levi, and Judah,
- 3 Issachar, Zebulun, and Benjamin,
- 4 Dan, and Naphtali, Gad, and Asher.

1 These are the names of the sons of Israel who came to Egypt with Jacob, each with his household: 2 Reuben, Simeon, Levi, and Judah, 3 Is'sachar, Zeb'ulun, and Benjamin, 4 Dan and Naph'tali, Gad and

I. PREAMBLE (1:1-22)

If, as noted above (see Intro., p. 833), the book of Exodus is comparable to a drama, this first chapter may be likened to the biographical notes and explanations of scenes that introduce a play.

A. ISRAEL IN EGYPT (1:1-7)

1:1-4. Now these are the names is the phrase by which the book is designated in Hebrew. The late priestly editors regularly use genealogies and name lists as a device for providing the history of Israel and of mankind with an explicit chronological framework. This list has the same order as that given in Gen. 35:23-26. The names of the milk was considered a great dainty, and that wandering bands of boys, finding a kid and its mother on their excursions into the waterless wilderness, would often satisfy their appetites by cooking the kid on the sly, using the mother's milk for want of other liquid, not realizing that they were jeopardizing the existence of the whole tribe, and that the enormity of their act injured the herds which were food and prosperity for all. Such a sin seemed to the folk of that day more heinous than simple stealing, more heinous even than murder. Whether the command had some such moral ground or was simply a ritual injunction, we have not only the right but the duty to inquire if its grounds are still valid for us. It has been compellingly said that every class interest in all history has defended itself from examination by putting forth claim to absoluteness. And we ourselves are no exception. We seem to have advanced but little from the technique of the various groups who worked over the material in Exodus and inserted a "Thus saith the LORD" before their pet prohibitions. We will go to any length to avoid the intolerable effort of conscious thought. We let our columnists and commentators do our thinking for us. We capitulate to slogans. We need to be reminded constantly of the fact that what was a valid "Thus saith the LORD" to a band of nomads in the wilderness may not be pertinent now. Much of what was real and vital to them is today like the drinking troughs which the benevolent have endowed in perpetuity for horses in the very centers of our motorized cities—though such monuments do have much to teach us of the kindness and thoughtfulness of the human heart. So when people speak of the inexorable law of supply and demand, of the duty of all men to be content in the lot to which God has called them, of the absolute character of national sovereignty, of the superior importance of individual initiative over social justice, we have a duty to discover for ourselves whether we are listening to the runes droned from the rocking chair of use and wont, or whether we are hearing the authentic voice of God. Foreign missions were not established on the basis of Exod. 22:20, "He that sacrificeth unto any god, save unto the LORD only, he shall be utterly destroyed."

Yet surely it needs to be said that when this book is read in a religious rather than in an idolatrous spirit, it is full of inspiration, wisdom, tenderness, shrewdness, and devotion. Augustine writes: "Blessed are they who know which are Thy commands. For the thing was all done by Thy servants; either to show something needful for the present, or to foreshow things to come."⁴ Another ancient writer adds, where God speaks, there it is all God; here where man understands it, it is God and creature.⁵

1:1-6. The Names of the Sons of Israel.—An interest in one's own genealogy is often the preliminary symptom of old age. With nations it is the preliminary symptom of the sense of nationalism. These names are repeated many times in the Bible, every time in the order in which they were remembered. They occur in more than twenty different arrangements in the O.T. and the N.T. There is nothing extraordinary about that. Every nation has its list of founders, of

⁴ Confessions III. 9. 17.

⁵ Franz Pfeiffer, Meister Eckhart, tr. C. de B. Evans (London: John M. Watkins, 1924-31), I, 164.

5 And all the souls that came out of the loins of Jacob were seventy souls: for Joseph was in Egypt already.

6 And Joseph died, and all his brethren, and all that generation.

Asher. 5 All the offspring of Jacob were seventy persons; Joseph was already in Egypt. 6 Then Joseph died, and all his sons of the wives, Leah and Rachel, precede those of the sons of the concubines. The sons of Israel means the sons of Jacob. The patriarchal stories in Genesis and the account of Moses and the Exodus originally belonged to different themes and may have circulated independently. Biblical writers and editors emphasize the ethnic tie between the descendants of the patriarchal heroes and the Israelites delivered from bondage. Thus they make Genesis and Exodus part of a single sequence. Also, they interpret the meaning of the nomadic Hebrew wandering into Egypt in the light of the deliverance of Israel and its establishment as the people of God.

5. Seventy souls: The word שבעים here means persons, as it commonly does in P. The names of the seventy male descendants are given in Gen. 46:8-27. Deut. 10:22 also mentions seventy persons as having gone into Egypt, without specifying that they went down with Jacob. In each case the LXX tells us that there were "seventy and five" souls (cf. also, Codex Alexandrinus on Deut. 10:22). This larger total is justified by the LXX's insertion (Gen. 46:20) of the names of two sons and a grandson of Ephraim and a son and grandson of Manasseh. In Acts 7:14 the number given is also seventy-five. The LXX wants to include all the offspring of Jacob. The Hebrew text limits itself to those who came to Egypt with Jacob. In either case the number is symbolic. The P writer is not primarily concerned to offer a census statistic but a genealogy that symbolizes Israel's unity under God. The earliest writers of the Bible were content to be vague about numbers (e.g., 12:37; Gen. 16:10; Josh. 11:4). The story of Joseph suggests that the people of Exodus did not all enter Egypt at one time. Nor must this list be taken to mean that every tribe which later became a part of Israel in Canaan had once been enslaved in Egypt. The list is a symbol to attest that the event of deliverance is basic in the whole national and religious consciousness of Israel in Canaan, just as the American Revolution is basic to the national consciousness of all Americans wherever their ancestors may have been when it occurred.

6. Then Joseph died seems to have been the phrase by which the J historian introduced the traditions recorded in Exodus. It can be read as a continuation of Gen. 50:21, the probable close of the J strand in that book.

original tribal chiefs. The Nazis tried to make use of their own Germanic pantheon as the basis for a national religion. In the pulpits of Scotland, when to read the Scripture without comment was illegal lest one fall into the error of "vain repetitions," it was often the custom to illustrate this list in the first few verses of Exodus by a recitation of the names of Scottish heroes. Logically it would seem that other nations ought to be able to do what the Jews did and provide a list of their own national figures as a substitute in such religious litanies. But nothing of the sort has ever been a success. There is about Christianity a sense of universalism, illustrated by the fact that Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, or the names in this list, such as Reuben, Simeon, Levi, and Judah, have come in the course of the centuries to represent to all men the human race itself. Nationalism is a poor substitute for Christianity. Pride of lineage based on covenant or blood must manifest itself in accordance with the French phrase, noblesse oblige—"much given, much expected" (Luke 12:48).

6-8. A New King . . . Which Knew Not Joseph.—Death, which seems so tragic as an individual incident, is the condition of all progress. Joseph died, as did all the rich memories of the service he had rendered. A new king arose which knew not Joseph, nor anything at all that he had stood for and achieved. Joseph's ripe experience which could have counseled the people, "You must not try that; we did, years ago, and it would not work," was no longer available. A ruler unpracticed in the policies of co-operation

7 ¶ And the children of Israel were fruitful, and increased abundantly, and multiplied, and waxed exceeding mighty; and the land was filled with them.

8 Now there arose up a new king over Egypt, which knew not Joseph.

9 And he said unto his people, Behold, the people of the children of Israel are more and mightier than we:

brothers, and all that generation. 7 But the descendants of Israel were fruitful and increased greatly; they multiplied and grew exceedingly strong; so that the land was filled with them.

8 Now there arose a new king over Egypt, who did not know Joseph. 9 And he said to his people, "Behold, the people of Israel are too many and too mighty for us.

7. Were fruitful and increased greatly is the P phrase. It continues vs. 5. The Hebrew for increased greatly means to teem or to swarm. It is used of marine life (Gen. 1:20) and of insects of all sorts (Gen. 7:21). Here the emphasis is upon the extraordinarily rapid increase of Israel. Even in a foreign land the promise to Abraham was being fulfilled (Gen. 12:2). The command and the promise made to mankind at creation (Gen. 1:28) were now the prerogative of Israel. The phrase that follows means essentially the same thing; it is probably a J remnant. The land was filled with them hints at the reason for the repressive measures instituted by the Pharaoh. The slaves were on the way to becoming a cultural and political force, as well as an economic asset. The Egyptians were faced with the problem of exploiting the economic asset without risking political security and cultural integrity. The land refers to "the land of Rameses" (Gen. 47:11), that part of Egypt in which later on Ramses II built cities. It is the equivalent of what J called "the land of Goshen" (Gen. 47:1). E, however, seems to assume that the Israelites lived everywhere in Egypt rather than in a special section. This seems implied in his account of the midwives (vss. 15-22) and also in the story of the discovery of Moses and his adoption by the princess (2:1-10).

B. ISRAEL ENSLAVED (1:8-14)

8. Who was this new king over Egypt? The "Pharaoh of the oppression" and, on the basis of 2:23; 4:19, the immediate predecessor of the Pharaoh of the Exodus (cf. Intro., p. 836). The new king could not possibly have known Joseph personally. But what is implied is that he launched a new policy with respect to the Israelites. He chose to ignore the past services of Joseph (cf. Judg. 2:10). As the first strong ruler of the Nineteenth Dynasty, Ramses II was more than another ruler: he embodied a new era.

9. The RSV reading, too many and too mighty for us, is an adequate rendering of the Hebrew (cf. I Kings 19:7, where the Hebrew structure is the same). The tiny and friendship which Joseph had so laboriously built up was on the throne. So often death seems to cancel all that life has learned. It was as if nobody was left who knew how this situation or that had come to pass, how reverently this tradition should be treated, what idea, born of experience, lay back of having this transaction done in just this way. It is these impieties of progress that shock the conservative.

And yet—without the cemetery in every village and town and country, how could any progress at all ever have been possible? This good man dies, and with him dies much hard-won knowledge; but with him dies also much prejudice and blind confidence and prudent paralysis. The new generation tries what the old generation has proved to be impossible—and does it. The present has to meet conditions undreamed of by the statesmen of the past. The only good that can outlast men's hands is the good they have so kneaded into life that it is able to operate without them.

7-12. The Would-be Master Race.—Here we find the Egyptians faced with the same problem which has worried many a national leader since. It is the eternal joke which unconscious biology plays at the expense of conscious culture. The "other people" are increasing faster than we are! The Germanic peoples multiplied faster than the French, the Slavs faster than any of them, the Japanese faster than the Europeans. We are always under the threat of having 10 Come on, let us deal wisely with them; lest they multiply, and it come to pass, that, when their falleth out any war, they join also unto our enemies, and fight against us, and so get them up out of the land.

11 Therefore they did set over them taskmasters to afflict them with their burdens. And they built for Pharaoh treasure cities, Pithom and Raamses.

12 But the more they afflicted them, the more they multiplied and grew. And they were grieved because of the children of Israel.

10 Come, let us deal shrewdly with them, lest they multiply, and, if war befall us, they join our enemies and fight against us and escape from the land." 11 Therefore they set taskmasters over them to afflict them with heavy burdens; and they built for Pharaoh store cities, Pithom and Ra-am'ses. 12 But the more they were oppressed, the more they multiplied and the more they spread abroad. And the Egyptians were in Israelite minority was one of many similar groups in Egypt. In retrospect our historian, who assumes that the Israelite slaves in Egypt lived out of the "promise" which was for him in process of fulfillment, asserts that they alone constituted a threat to Egypt's security. He does not say that the Israelites outnumbered the Egyptians, but that they were "too much" for them and made them afraid.

10. The king decides to deal shrewdly with the Israelites. His aim is to retain the people as an economic asset and yet avoid a threat to Egypt's security. He hopes that hard labor will break their spirit and check their rapid growth. We have a hint here of the dramatic action that is to come: the "fruitfulness" of the Israelites is the mark of divine promise. In seeking to destroy it the king enters into conflict with the God of Israel. He is determined that Israel shall not escape from the land. The literal meaning is "go up from the land," perhaps to the higher ground of Canaan.

11. To carry out their shrewd, two-pronged plan the Egyptians conscripted the Israelites into labor battalions. This was the maş or corvée, which was very common in the ancient world, as in the twentieth century. The great building programs of Egypt were executed by this type of slave labor and Solomon, who was under Egyptian influence, introduced it in the united kingdom (I Kings 5:13-14; 9:15), thus hastening the dissolution of his empire (I Kings 12:18). The taskmasters, general supervisors, were probably Egyptians, but the foremen seem to have been Israelites (5:14). The slaves built for Pharaoh, i.e., for the state; the title at this time was a synonym for public authority. Later, in the Twenty-second Dynasty, it became a personal title of the ruler. They built the store cities, Pithom and Raamses. Pithom was situated in the Wadi Tumilat, which connects the Nile and Lake Timsah. For a generation Tell el-Maskhuteh, excavated by Naville, was unanimously accepted as its site. This has now been given up and Pithom is located at Tell er-Retabeh, eight miles farther east in the same valley. Raamses was once located at Tell er-Retabeh, but its site is now generally identified with Tanis. Ramses II built more in this area than the two cities here mentioned; that has made it more difficult to be certain about the location of these two.

12. Here we turn from chronicle to poesy. The shame and honor of the facts just cited are raised to the theme of a folklore which is a prelude that introduces the story

"others," in the words of the text, become too many and too mighty to suit our convenience. It is a condition which has been one of the causes of war throughout history and threatens to be the cause of wars to follow. No one seems to know just why one nation should be possessed of so much more vitality than another; why the Germans were able to recover in twenty-five years after their disastrous defeat in 1918, and to such an extent that they came within an ace of conquering the world. Perhaps they had more thyroid! At least we have begun to see that though wars never seem fatal, they are never won. That much is gain. Meanwhile the biolog-

13 And the Egyptians made the children of Israel to serve with rigor:

14 And they made their lives bitter with hard bondage, in mortar, and in brick, and in all manner of service in the field: all their service, wherein they made them serve, was with rigor.

dread of the people of Israel. 13 So they made the people of Israel serve with rigor, 14 and made their lives bitter with hard service, in mortar and brick, and in all kinds of work in the field; in all their work they made them serve with rigor.

of the Exodus and creates a proper mood for it. The greater the oppression, the greater the signs of the "promise." This historian is a man of faith for whom the story of Israel's enslavement and release are parts of a divine comedy. The efforts of the Egyptians must have made God smile! More than ever the Egyptians were in dread . . . of Israel. The Hebrew word conveys an element of awe; there was something eerie and unnerving about this people.

13-14. These two verses were added by P. They are motivated by the same faith that underlies the preceding verse. The hardness of the oppression is driven home; the term rigor is repeated; so is the verb serve, which means the toiling of slaves. Hard bondage (KJV) is perhaps preferable.

ical problem is as great a mystery to us as it was to this new Pharaoh. He found that these despised people were increasing more rapidly than the master race. And so he afflicted them. But as often happens, the more they were oppressed, the more they multiplied. He forced them to build store-cities for him, one of which—Pithom—has been identified with a moderate amount of certainty and found on excavation to contain the remains of large granaries.

People sometimes say that the only lesson learned from history is that it does not teach any lesson. It does seem to be generally true, however, that within certain limits hard times are apt to breed a stronger people than easy times; and that as difficulty tends to develop stamina, so prosperity tends to result in degeneration. When the pursuit of happiness is regarded as synonymous with the pursuit of comfort, the population begins to dwindle and discontent looks out of the eyes of the people. The Israelites in Egypt did not find life easy; but they became "too many and too mighty" for their masters.

13-14. The Recognition of the Common Man.—Because historians have generally come from the upper classes, history usually has been written about the doings of the masters. It is filled with the exploits of kings and queens, of politicians and financiers, of nobles and generals, and the movements of the lower classes have been labeled "rebellions" or "insurrections" which had to be "quelled." Tacitus speaks of the operations of Spartacus as shameful and humiliating.⁶ No Roman writer recognizes his greatness. Labor leaders are "robbers," "public enemies," or "agitators." Their followers are

⁶ Annals III. 73; see also Horace Odes III. 14. 19.

"mobs." People who work with their hands are apt to be looked upon as bad. In 1769, John Wilkes was thrice elected to Parliament, and thrice refused admission by the "masters." On the last occasion he won by a large majority; whereupon the House of Commons passed a solemn motion that the rival candidate "ought to have been returned," and installed his defeated opponent.⁷ Only in recent years has an attempt been made to write the history of the people, of the workers, as well as of their masters.

The one notable, unexpected, astonishing exception to this tradition among ancient historians is Exodus. It is the sympathetic account of a great strike, a total walkout of oppressed laboring people, under a valiant leader. Comfortable church people, sitting in cushioned pews, have preferred to hear it expounded from the pulpit solely as the account of a supernatural episode, illustrating the favor shown by God to his chosen people, not for any merit or worthiness in them, but "out of his mere good pleasure." They lose sight too readily of the seething restlessness underneath. It is significant that Moses is portrayed not from Pharaoh's point of view as a rebel and an anarchist, not from the employers' point of view as an ambitious and self-seeking rabble-rouser, but from the people's point of view as the resourceful leader of the oppressed and exploited masses. "Up from slavery" is the crest of an honorable tradition, far more honorable than that of the masters. The Negro, who has more reason than most white men to be proud of his ancestry, has appreciated the truth of the ⁷ J. R. Green, A Short History of the English People, ed. Mrs. J. R. Green and Miss Kate Norgate (New York: Harper & Bros., 1893-95), ch. x, sec. 2.

15 ¶ And the king of Egypt spake to the Hebrew midwives, of which the name of the one was Shiphrah, and the name of the other Puah;

16 And he said, When ye do the office of a midwife to the Hebrew women, and see them upon the stools, if it be a son, then ye shall kill him; but if it be a daughter, then she shall live.

17 But the midwives feared God, and did not as the king of Egypt commanded them, but saved the men children alive.

18 And the king of Egypt called for the midwives, and said unto them, Why have ye done this thing, and have saved the men children alive?

15 Then the king of Egypt said to the Hebrew midwives, one of whom was named Shiph'rah and the other Pu'ah, 16 "When you serve as midwife to the Hebrew women, and see them upon the birthstool, if it is a son, you shall kill him; but if it is a daughter, she shall live." 17 But the midwives feared God, and did not do as the king of Egypt commanded them, but let the male children live. 18 So the king of Egypt called the midwives, and said to them, "Why have you done this, and let the male children

C. PRELUDE TO MOSES (1:15-22)

15. The aim of the enslavement, aside from economic exploitation, was to curb the growth of the Israelites. This story stresses the king's fixed purpose. Since oppression did not impair their fertility, the king would destroy Israel's sons. The king did not know that God was his real protagonist. Because those who told or heard the story did know, the outcome of the new measure is never in doubt. The story is not so much a chronicle of fact as a testimony to the faith that God is free. It also sets the stage for the birth of Moses.

The king of Egypt is personally in charge and the Israelites rub elbows with the Egyptians. This is typical of E, through whom the story has come down to us. The writer probably thought of the midwives as Egyptian (cf. Josephus Antiquities II. 9. 2). By changing the initial vowel point of the Hebrew phrase to a hireq, we can translate it "to the midwives of the Hebrew women" (Georg Beer, Exodus mit einem Beitrag von Kurt Galling [Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1939], pp. 16-17). Hebrew in this story is a synonym for Israelite; originally it had a wider reference. Israelites were one group of Hebrews (G. E. Wright and F. V. Filson, The Westminster Historical Atlas to the Bible [Philadelphia: Westminster Press, 1945], p. 35b).

17. For the midwives, humaneness was an obligation that outranked national duty. The story calls this common human pity their fear of God, an expression of true religion that had its reward. The story affirms that God has revealed himself universally, in man's creation, as well as particularly, in man's redemption.

point of view of Exodus. Many of his spirituals are adaptations of the story of Exodus to his own race's history.

15-22. Cruelty and Its Limits.—Before 1914, a preacher might have commented complacently enough on the words If it be a son, then ye shall kill him, as showing that human nature does make progress, pointing out that such brutality is impossible in days like these. But we have lived to see history repeat itself, and these and other such horrors recur. A false creed can be used to "justify" any brutality. "We have to get rid of these people if the master race is to have its place in the sun." But the easy method of extermination does not gain for the masters their desired end. For there is a limit beyond which even the most subservient human nature will not go. The midwives took their orders, but could not bring themselves to carry them out. Good will, mercy, and kindness keep creeping into even the most brutal scheme of power. The aroused conscience of the world, like the waves of the Red Sea in our narrative, ultimately overwhelms the persecutors.

There are flashes of humor in the eyes of the narrator as he looks around his listening circle and tells them how Yahweh outwitted Pharaoh; how bright the midwives were in their reply to Pharaoh; and later, as he tells them how the departing Israelites "borrowed" treasures from their Egyptian neighbors, and how Moses' mother got paid for taking care of her own child.

19 And the midwives said unto Pharaoh, Because the Hebrew women are not as the Egyptian women; for they are lively, and are delivered ere the midwives come in unto them.

20 Therefore God dealt well with the midwives: and the people multiplied, and waxed very mighty.

21 And it came to pass, because the midwives feared God, that he made them houses.

22 And Pharaoh charged all his people, saying, Every son that is born ye shall cast into the river, and every daughter ye shall save alive.

2 And there went a man of the house of Levi, and took to wife a daughter of Levi.

live?" 19 The midwives said to Pharaoh, "Because the Hebrew women are not like the Egyptian women; for they are vigorous and are delivered before the midwife comes to them." 20 So God dealt well with the midwives; and the people multiplied and grew very strong. 21 And because the midwives feared God he gave them families. 22 Then Pharaoh commanded all his people, "Every son that is born to the Hebrews^a you shall cast into the Nile, but you shall let every daughter live."

2 Now a man from the house of Levi went and took to wife a daughter of

^a Sam Gk Tg: Heb lacks to the Hebrews

19. The excuse of the midwives is a clever use of fact to avoid the real issue at stake. This species of smart humor is quite typical of Israelite stories (cf. Gen. 29:26).

20. The king is made to look like a fathead; he is taken in by the excuse. God wins another round; the "promise" moves on in his design: the people multiplied.

21. This is an editor's gloss that almost ruins a good story. It tries to answer the pedantic question, How did God reward the midwives? Obviously, thinks the glossator, with motherhood, the best thing any woman could wish for.

22. This is really a third phase of the oppression and sets the stage for the Moses stories. The RSV wisely includes the phrase to the Hebrews on the basis of its occurrence in the Samar. and the LXX. The Hebrew word translated Nile is an adopted Egyptian word meaning "river" (cf. Dan. 12:5).

II. PREPARATION FOR DELIVERANCE (2:1-7:13)

A. GOD PROVIDES FOR A LEADER (2:1-25)

The action continues to presuppose the conflict between God and Pharaoh, even though God is in the background. The accounts of Moses' birth and survival are intended as testimony to the faith that, despite Israel's troubles, the God who is its redeemer always has the initiative.

I. BIRTH AND ADOPTION OF MOSES (2:1-10)

2:1. As with all great men, the story of Moses' birth did not begin to be told until after he was famous. Actual recollections were scanty. The form was largely determined by two other factors: (a) an ancient literary pattern, exemplified by the legend of Sargon of Agade, which was the standard form for relating the birth of a deliverer; and

There is another kind of humor, not so harmless, in Aaron's excuse to Moses about the golden calf—the people were partly to blame, and partly the fire, and partly it just happened to happen, "I cast it into the fire, and there came out this calf" (32:24), as if he were as much astonished as anybody.

2:1-10. The Child in the Ark.—One is sometimes tempted to say that a national idol should arrange to be born in a log cabin, or in some very small cottage in the country; when he leaves home for the city, he should have no more than fifty cents in his pocket; then to get on his feet he should sell papers in the street—at least for a few days.

There is certainly in the human heart a demand for such stories about the early life of its heroes. Romulus and Remus were exposed on the hillside and suckled by a she-wolf. Sargon, the Babylonian king (ca. 2850 B.C.), was born

2 And the woman conceived, and bare a son: and when she saw him that he was a goodly child, she hid him three months. | Levi. 2 The woman conceived and bore a son; and when she saw that he was a goodly

(b) the tendency to impute to the hero connections and activities considered desirable or normative by those who transmit the tradition. This may account for Moses' designation as a member of a priestly family of the house of Levi. According to one line of evidence Levi was an Israelite tribe which, along with Simeon, was virtually annihilated (Gen. 34:25; 49:5-7). The remnant thereafter gave its energies to priestly concerns (Theophile J. Meek, Hebrew Origins [rev. ed.; New York: Harper & Bros., 1950], pp. 119-47). Another line of evidence has led some to conclude that the Levites always were an order and not a tribe (32:26-29; Deut. 10:8-9; Num. 18:21; Judg. 17:7; 18:3, 14-31; cf. Paul Volz, Die biblischen Altertümer [Stuttgart: Calwer Vereinsbuchhandlung, 1914], p. 57). It seems possible to do justice to all the evidence if we hold that very early in Israel's history this tribe became a priestly class. Both the Sargon legend and the predilections of the Israelite writers make it almost imperative that the story should associate Moses with Levi.

2. Here Moses is clearly the first-born, though immediately below he has an older sister, and for the P genealogist Aaron was an older brother (6:20; Num. 26:59). The in the Armenian mountains of unknown parents. His mother put him in a basket, closed up the opening with pitch, and set him afloat on the Euphrates. He was picked up by the gardener Akki, and in the garden met the goddess Ishtar who loved him and made him king of Babylonia. The Japanese story is that the first child born of the divine parents of the human race was set adrift in an ark of reeds.

Thus the great man who is to lead his people through a sea baffles his enemies in his infancy when he is so small that reeds and rushes hide him. The feeling the author succeeds in conveying is the sense of the loving guardianship of the heavenly Father over the fortunes of his people. Every nation has known moments when its destiny seemed to tremble in jeopardy like the tiny ark among the reeds, watched by the loving eyes of one little girl, following it on the bank as it threaded its perilous way through the bulrushes. The fate of the centuries hung once on the life of another tiny babe, pursued and harried by those who sought its life (Matt. 2:13-23). One thinks also of Franklin in the Cockpit in London in 1774; or of Lincoln in the White House in 1864; or of Churchill in the winter of 1940-41, when he quoted the verse just sent him by President Franklin D. Roosevelt:

Sail on, O Ship of State!
Sail on, O Union, strong and great!
Humanity with all its fears,
With all the hopes of future years,
Is hanging breathless on thy fate!⁸

The impression which Churchill wished to convey to the Houses of Parliament was exactly that which our author felt as he told with such deep feeling the story of the ark on the waters of the Nile. Some call it coincidence, and some call it God, that the king's daughter should have just happened to come down to the river to bathe at the moment when the tiny ark with its precious freight was entangled among the flags at her feet. She sent her maid to fetch it. One might read in the papers that "stern measures have had to be taken to prevent the inordinate increase of the Jewish people, lest they become a menace to our security." But what woman could resist the tears of the little creature in the ark, so lovingly covered in by a mother's care? She had compassion on him, though she recognized that this is one of the Hebrews' children (vs. 6). Then the watchful little person who has been in charge comes up with her innocent question, Shall I go and call . . . a nurse of the Hebrew women, that she may nurse the child for thee? (Vs. 7.) This is good storytelling. It is the "patterns" of life that are cruel, as Amy Lowell says. People as a rule are kind. Here we see human nature breaking through the stern pattern of cruelty to save the great hero's life and give him a chance at an education as "the son" of Pharaoh's daughter, nursed by the best nurse a child ever had, his mother. The Quakers re-enacted the story for tens of thousands of lost children all over the world after the first and second world wars.

⁸ Longfellow, "The Building of the Ship."

It all seems to hang upon coincidence, to depend upon chance, that Pharaoh's daughter happened to want to bathe at that particular time, that she happened to come to the very inlet of the river at which the tiny ark happened to be. Pious folk have always hailed chance as the child, she hid him three months. 3 And when she could hide him no longer she took for him a basket made of bulrushes, and daubed it with bitumen and pitch; and she put the child in it and placed it among the reeds at the river's brink.

3 And when she could not longer hide him, she took for him an ark of bulrushes, and daubed it with slime and with pitch, and put the child therein; and she laid it in the flags by the river's brink.

4 And his sister stood afar off, to wit what would be done to him.

5 ¶ And the daughter of Pharaoh came down to wash herself at the river; and her maidens walked along by the river's side; and when she saw the ark among the flags, she sent her maid to fetch it.

4 And his sister stood at a distance, to know what would be done to him. 5 Now the daughter of Pharaoh came down to bathe at the river, and her maidens walked beside the river; she saw the basket among the reeds and sent suggestion has been made that Aaron and Miriam were children by an earlier marriage (15:20; Num. 12:1). That is an ad hoc solution which ignores the dynamic tendencies in the development of the story. Jewish legend tried to solve the problem by maintaining that, because of the king's edict, Moses' parents had been officially separated for a number of years before his birth. The confusion possibly indicates that Moses was originally not a Levite (4:14).

3. The birth story of Sargon of Agade (Robert William Rogers, ed., Cuneiform Parallels to the Old Testament [2nd ed.; New York: Abingdon Press, 1926], p. 136) shows a common literary structure:

My vestal mother conceived me, in secret she brought me forth.
 She set me in a basket of rushes, with bitumen she closed my door;
 She cast me into the river, which rose not over me.
 The river bore me up, unto Akki, the irrigator, it carried me.
 Akki, the irrigator, with . . . lifted me out,
 Akki, the irrigator, as his own son . . . reared me,
 Akki, the irrigator, as his gardener appointed me.

5. The daughter of Pharaoh herself discovers the basket. She is presumably in the water. The reeds hid the basket from attendants on the bank. According to Jewish personal pleasure ground of the God of Law, where he is free from official legality and can at times waive such principles as those of cause and effect and act with arbitrary kindness and favor. This popular conception satisfies and comforts a great many people. It becomes dangerous when devout students feel that God will see to it that the examination paper will contain the very few questions to which they happen to know the answers, so that toilsome study of the subject is unnecessary. We are very ignorant on such subjects as the relation of God to his own laws, but it is probably safe to say: (a) Without a law of some kind, nothing can exist. Nothing happens by chance. There are laws that determine the timing of a sneeze, the sudden impulse, the idle half-conscious act. (b) Some of these laws are so complicated, layer upon layer, wheels within wheels, that no one has been able to unravel them, and things seem to happen by chance. But one can never count upon such chance events occurring in his favor.

To do so is superstitious. God operates, by laws we have not been able to analyze, at the utmost bounds of human effort when we have done all we can to attain the desired end. (c) Our real acquaintance with God is shown in the way we meet and deal with such seemingly fortuitous events. Skill and virtue have an affinity for luck. Whatever happens to anybody may be turned to beautiful results.⁹

4. The Little Sister Afar Off.—This is a good illustration of what Milton was talking about in his sonnet "On His Blindness," when he wrote, "They also serve who only stand and wait." The experience is harrowing when one feels, as in Matt. 26:58, that he is in great part responsible for a situation. The key is to be found in Lam. 3:26: not fear and worry, but hope and prayer.

No one knows much about the laws which operate in prayer. Every minister and doctor is ⁹ For a mystical fantasy on chance see the conclusion of the story "Reunion in Paris," by Alexander Woollcott, While Rome Burns (New York: Viking Press, 1934).

6 And when she had opened it, she saw the child: and, behold, the babe wept. And she had compassion on him, and said, This is one of the Hebrews' children.

7 Then said his sister to Pharaoh's daughter, Shall I go and call to thee a nurse of the Hebrew women, that she may nurse the child for thee?

8 And Pharaoh's daughter said to her, Go. And the maid went and called the child's mother.

9 And Pharaoh's daughter said unto her, Take this child away, and nurse it for me, and I will give thee thy wages. And the woman took the child, and nursed it.

her maid to fetch it. 6 When she opened it she saw the child; and lo, the babe was crying. She took pity on him and said, "This is one of the Hebrews' children." 7 Then his sister said to Pharaoh's daughter, "Shall I go and call you a nurse from the Hebrew women to nurse the child for you?" 8 And Pharaoh's daughter said to her, "Go." So the girl went and called the child's mother. 9 And Pharaoh's daughter said to her, "Take this child away, and nurse him for me, and I will give you your wages." So the woman took the child and nursed him.

tradition the maids refused to fetch the basket on account of the king's edict. So the princess herself procured it (cf. vs. 10, I drew him). A mural in the ancient synagogue excavated at Dura-Europos portrays this tradition (see M. I. Rostovtzeff, Dura-Europos and Its Art [Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1938], pp. 112, 114, Pl. XXIII). Jewish legend further adds that when she touched the basket, the princess was instantly healed of leprosy.

6. She took pity on him: The humaneness of the midwives is also a gift of the princess. There is a delicate sensitiveness here not found in the Sargon legend. It is at once humane and religious. The pagan princess too fears God. With the survival of Moses the slaughter of the innocents is a failure. This is stressed by Josephus (Antiquities II. 9. 2). The birth stories of Jesus and John the Baptist owe much to the stories of Moses' infancy. The princess who disobeys her father and the magi who ignore Herod play the same role.

9. The Hebrew mother nursed him. The point is that Moses was a real Israelite. In ancient Hebrew as in current Arabic thinking, ethnic solidarity is established by the suckling of the infant. Israelites took equal pride in the notion that the child was nursed by his Hebrew mother and that he was adopted by a princess of Egypt. As a deliverer he must belong to Israel as well as to Egypt; and the bond with Israel is more profound.

acquainted with families where there seem always to be disaster and sickness. These "birds of a feather flock together." Where the symptoms of the family's ills are served regularly at breakfast, where everyone dies a hundred times before his death in imagination and fear, where the worst is always expected, there is the soil on which disaster grows. We hope that this little girl was looking out to see that somebody nice picked baby brother up, not expecting to see a crocodile get him. For there is some kind of a connection between the state of mind of a person and the things that happen to him and to those dear to him. In the present state of our knowledge no clear blueprint or plan of operation is available as to the connection between our minds and others' minds, or between our inner life and the workings of nature. Often we cannot see any rhyme or reason in the way things happen to other people, but as we grow older we begin to see a kind of providence in the way things have happened to ourselves. For the net result of any event is sometimes a long time clearing up. We are too spiritually adolescent to attain to the faith in faith which Jesus possessed, but we do realize that there is something there which we can follow afar off. One has to prepare himself for what is to happen. "Good" things cannot happen to "bad" people, and someday we may come to see that "bad" things cannot happen to "good" people, that "all things work together for good to them that love God" (Rom. 8:28). It is a tremendous faith, and so we are left wondering if the hope of the little girl and the love of the mother weeping at home had anything to do with the sudden impulse of the princess to take a bath. All we know is that real prayer is the preparing of the whole life for the occurrence of great events. Let no one tell us that it is ridiculous to pray to a loving Father for the things we have done our utmost to attain, and desire with all that is best in our lives. Look more closely, and perhaps we shall see the lips of the maiden mov-

10 And the child grew, and she brought him unto Pharaoh's daughter, and he became her son. And she called his name Moses: and she said, Because I drew him out of the water.

10 And the child grew, and she brought him to Pharaoh's daughter, and he became her son; and she named him Moses,^b for she said, "Because I drew him out^c of the water."

^b Heb Mosheh

^c Heb mashah

10. The adoption of Moses and his Egyptian education are never alluded to in his later conflict with Pharaoh. But it seems that he originally had an Egyptian name, Mes, meaning son or child. The Hebraic form of the name was Môsheh which could be the active participle of the Hebrew root, māshāh, "to draw out." If the Hebrew form of his name is to have any meaning, it must be "the one who draws forth," i.e., he was mōshēh 'ammō (Isa. 63:11), the drawer forth of his people. The statement of the princess is not a translation of Môsheh. Possibly it means that she, like Moses, is one who draws out.

ing in such a prayer, learned at her mother's knee.

Think not it is with God as with a human carpenter, who works or not as he chooses, who can do or leave undone at his good pleasure. It is not thus with God; but finding thee ready he is obliged to act, to overflow into thee; just as the sun must needs burst forth when the air is bright and clear, and is unable to contain itself. . . . Every good thing communicates itself to whatever is able to receive it.¹

10. The Royal Adoption.—According to Acts 7:22, Moses was educated in the schools of Egypt and was learned in all their wisdom. So also says Philo. Schiller popularized this view in a beautifully written thesis² in which he described how the peoples of that time and subsequent centuries were sunk in the errors of polytheism and idolatry. There was however one exception—a small circle of Egyptian sages, students of the mysteries, who had arrived at the truth of God's unity. Moses, says Schiller, was a member of this small circle of scholars, and felt he was justified in breaking the vow of secrecy and revealing to the world the new truth of monotheism. The students of the mysteries had arrived at this conclusion by prolonged intellectual effort. Moses realized that no such process would be possible for his nomad people and had to demand from them blind faith, supported by miracle. Yet his courage in breaking his vow and telling the world the truth about God ranks with the greatest deeds of history. There is probably no truth in Schiller's beautiful hypothesis. The mysteries of Isis and their exercise of reason in the field of religion did not exist in Egypt in the time of Moses. All attempts to find any connection between the religion of Egypt and that promulgated by Moses have failed. Egypt was still polytheistic in his time. It represented its gods with the heads of animals, and its essence was in the worship of the dead. Moses on the other hand was monotheistic, allowed no representations of the deity, and had little or nothing to say about the dead.

10. And She Called His Name Moses.—How far the stories of this book are founded on fact is a question which we cannot answer. Those who know most about the history of the period differ in their views as to the extent to which the writers had access to traditions going back to early times. There does seem to be evidence that there was a great leader called Moses in the early history of the Jewish people, and that some of the tribes of Israel were for a time in bondage in the land of Egypt. The etymology of the name Moses (see Exeg.) raises many questions, and all derivations have been disputed by some scholars. The question of the historical foundations of the narrative is so involved and requires such accumulated erudition and a lifetime of research that the ordinary man had better let it alone. "Literal inerrancy" is an idol in the temple of the false gods by whom men are deceived. The full name and street address of the good Samaritan are as irrelevant to faith as the birth certificate of Moses. God in Jesus revealed himself most fully in parables. But it is much easier to preach alleged facts than it is to enter into the faith of a prophet proclaiming his experience of God's guidance in story and parable. Everyone writes history from a point of view, as he must select the facts to be recorded from among millions of others. Much of Christian theology has depended on the idea that there took place in history non-recurring official transactions between God and man on which our salvation depends. So we have come to believe that faith is the blind acceptance of historic facts by those who do not

¹ Pfeiffer, Meister Eckhart, I, 23, 337.

² "Die Sendung Moses," Sämmtliche Werke (Stuttgart: Cotta, 1847), X, 401.

11 ¶ And it came to pass in those days, when Moses was grown, that he went out unto his brethren, and looked on their burdens: and he spied an Egyptian smiting a Hebrew, one of his brethren.

12 And he looked this way and that way, and when he saw that there was no man, he slew the Egyptian, and hid him in the sand.

11 One day, when Moses had grown up, he went out to his people and looked on their burdens; and he saw an Egyptian beating a Hebrew, one of his people. 12 He looked this way and that, and seeing no one he killed the Egyptian and hid him in

2. MOSES DISCOVERS HIS PEOPLE (2:11-15)

11. In many allusive and authentic ways the historic character of Moses is revealed in these stories of his first public acts. His readiness to sacrifice himself for his people, his passionate sense of justice, his capacity for flaming anger, his prudent recklessness, and his courageous audacity; these are the real traits of the hero in all the materials that bear on him. Here they are embodied in an incident. In a profound way Moses impressed these traits upon his people so that, as fact and ideal, they survive until now. Like many a later exempt "court Jew," he chose to share "ill-treatment with the people of God" (Heb. 11:25). In Israel ethnic responsibility and religious faithfulness are virtually inseparable. Moses was dismayed at the suffering, and when he saw a sadistic overseer kill a slave his anger rose to make him act. The translation beating a Hebrew is quite inadequate in this context.

12. Moses struck back; "life for life" (21:23). An outrageous combination of recklessness and prudence: he acts wholly on his own authority. This type of audacity was a common key to leadership in Israel; see, e.g., the stories of the judges, and especially of Saul (I Sam. 11).

trouble themselves to make sure that the evidence for them is sound. It may be, however, that such facts are only of value to us in so far as we have tested their underlying validity in our own experience (see Gal. 2:20).

The proof of the inspiration of the documents is not in the documents; it is in us, as Meister Eckhart says:

Ask a good man, "Why dost thou love God?"—He says: "I know not; for God's sake."—"Why dost thou love the truth?"—"For the truth's sake."—"Why dost thou love right?"—"For righteousness' sake."—"Why dost thou love good?"—"For good's sake."—"Why dost thou live?"—"I' faith, I know not! I like living."⁴

11-12. Moses Kills an Egyptian Taskmaster.—In stories of this kind the hero as a rule accidentally discovers the secret of his birth and lineage. This incident may have been lost in editing the various stories which are woven into the Bible narrative. We are left to wonder how Moses learned that he was a Hebrew and not a genuine Egyptian prince. We are inclined to speculate, on the basis of other such stories, about a necklace left around his neck by his mother, or the little garment in which he was found by the princess in the river, preserved throughout the years in the palace, or a chance meeting with his sister, or personal appearance different from other Egyptians. Whatever it was that raised his suspicions that he was not Egyptian, the phrase he went out unto his brethren indicates that he had come to know the secret of his birth. Such a discovery is a test of character. The author of the book of Hebrews recognizes the fine caliber of the man who is willing to renounce all his special privileges for the sake of his "ain folk"⁴: "Moses . . . refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter" (Heb. 11:24). The greatest men of history have been those who have identified themselves with the oppressed, and have heard and understood those great words, "Never send to know for whom the bell tolls; it tolls for thee."⁵ The supreme example in Christian theology has been our Lord, "who, being in the form of God, . . . made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, . . . and became obedient unto death: even the death of the cross" (Phil. 2:6-8). When this great act of renunciation takes place, it is only effective if it is not an act of condescension, but a proclamation of fact. Moses was a Hebrew and God was hu-

⁴ Pfeiffer, Meister Eckhart, I, 42.

⁴ Walter White, "Why I Remain a Negro," Saturday Review of Literature, XXX (1947), 13.

⁵ John Donne, Devotions XVII.

13 And when he went out the second day, behold, two men of the Hebrews strove together: and he said to him that did the wrong, Wherefore smitest thou thy fellow?

14 And he said, Who made thee a prince and a judge over us? intendest thou to kill me, as thou killedst the Egyptian? And Moses feared, and said, Surely this thing is known.

the sand. 13 When he went out the next day, behold, two Hebrews were struggling together; and he said to the man that did the wrong, "Why do you strike your fellow?" 14 He answered, "Who made you a prince and a judge over us? Do you mean to kill me as you killed the Egyptian?" Then Moses was afraid, and thought,

13. Having discovered his people in their suffering, Moses cannot rest. He goes out to see them again the next day. He comes upon two Hebrews fighting each other. In such a fight death was the object and the typical outcome (II Sam. 14:6). Moses turns to the guilty party, perhaps the one who began the fight, and asks, Why do you strike your fellow? The social and psychological disintegration of the enslaved, sadly documented in our own century, troubles Moses (6:9).

14. The Hebrew looks on Moses as a troublemaker who will make the bitter life of the slaves even more unbearable. He reflects the servile and submissive pattern of the enslaved Israelites (Acts 7:25). Also, he is the type of those Israelites who challenged Moses' authority throughout his career. The historian would agree with the challenge at this point in Moses' career; obviously, for he has not yet received his vocation. He is not yet a prince and a judge, i.e., one who can make ethical decisions because he embodies authority. The core of justice, mishpāt in the O.T., is neither positive knowledge nor a metaphysical principle, but the living power of God.

man from all eternity, as has been expressed in the phrase "the Christhood of God."

Aflame with indignation at the mistreatment and torture of his brethren, Moses looked this way and that, . . . and when he saw that there was no man, he slew the Egyptian, and hid him in the sand. Under similar circumstances David Livingstone, according to the Encyclopaedia Britannica, had "the impression that he was in hell" as he saw in the crowded market place the Arab slavers, without warning or provocation, commence shooting the women, hundreds being killed or drowned in trying to escape. His "first impulse was to pistol the murderers," but he knew that would be futile. He acted more wisely than Moses, because it was the account of that incident which aroused indignation in England to such a pitch that the sultan was in great part forced by the British to suppress the trade.

Every detective story is proof of the futility of looking this way and that. Someone always sees, some clue is always left. Violence seems sometimes inevitable, but is generally a mistake. Deeds that seem glorious are done, but they do not help the cause. Remember Bernard Shaw's remark that one should always spank his children when in a violent temper, otherwise he misses the only good result which accrues to the spanking, the satisfaction it gives himself. John Brown, who thought he had "letters of marque from God" and expressed his ideas by acts of violence rather than by words, had a soul that goes marching on in courage and heroism. Yet the Encyclopaedia Britannica has to add this postscript to his glorious deeds: "It now seems that this policy aided very little in making Kansas a free State, and that the attack on Harper's Ferry, while creating much feeling at the moment, had very little effect on the subsequent course of events." Though most men may still feel that organized national violence is sometimes inevitable, they are nevertheless more conscious than formerly of the evils which such violence brings in its train, and are less sure than formerly that the good done outweighs the evil. The race is preparing itself to resolve that mass violence must be restricted to some kind of international police force, and used for the good of all by the will of a body representing all men.

13-14. The Ingratitude of the Oppressed.— There is always disappointment when youth discovers that its first altruistic deeds are not met with appreciation and gratitude. Aflame to help the downtrodden, the young man finds they neither understand nor bless their benefactor. One of the first lessons in the good life is not to expect applause. The farseeing reformer is nearly always opposed by his near-sighted beneficiaries. A statesman who tries to save the capitalistic system will have most employers against him, and a real labor leader is apt to lose his job. Moses here learned the first 15 Now when Pharaoh heard this thing, he sought to slay Moses. But Moses fled from the face of Pharaoh, and dwelt in the land of Midian: and he sat down by a well.

16 Now the priest of Midian had seven daughters: and they came and drew water, and filled the troughs to water their father's flock.

"Surely the thing is known." 15 When Pharaoh heard of it, he sought to kill Moses.

But Moses fled from Pharaoh, and stayed in the land of Mid'ian; and he sat down by a well. 16 Now the priest of Mid'ian had seven daughters; and they came and drew water, and filled the troughs to water their

15. Moses discovers that his deed of the previous day is known and fears that his own people, in servile self-defense, will betray him to the Egyptians. Prudence tells him he must leave. Indeed, the Pharaoh is said to know already and to be seeking his life. For the writer this enforced departure is not so much the defeat of an abortive effort to emancipate Israel as a step in God's preparation for deliverance through the vocation of a leader. Moses hid in the land of Midian. The Midianites were seminomadic people who were encountered east of the Jordan (Num. 22:4), and who on occasion invaded Edom (Gen. 36:35) and Canaan (Judg. 6-8). But their center seems to have been near the Gulf of Aqabah, perhaps to the east of it (I Kings 11:18). It is not improbable, however, that the eastern part of the Sinai Peninsula can also be called the land of Midian as used here. The traditional location of Mount Sinai would demand this hypothesis.

3. MOSES IN EXILE (2:16-23a)

16. The story is reminiscent of Jacob's arrival in Haran (Gen. 29). Jacob was seeking refuge among known kinsmen, while Moses is among strangers who are nevertheless distant kinsmen (Gen. 25:2). "Moses came back to his forefathers by way of his flight. . . . A man of the enslaved nation, but the only one not enslaved together with lesson of a leader—that he cannot work for people; he must humble himself and work with people.

We begin now to understand something of the character of the future lawgiver of Israel. Vss. 11-15 illustrate his passion for justice, his impatience with wrong, a hot temper of which his future life gives us many illustrations, and his wise prudence in not unnecessarily exposing himself to danger.

15-22. Moses Takes Refuge in Midian.—The composite material which constitutes Exodus can be appreciated when one honestly tries to discover from the text where the land of Midian was supposed to be or what the name of Moses' father-in-law really was. The Midianites were apparently an Arab people who lived south of the Edomites. The Nabataeans were probably their successors in this land, and it was they who built the famous city of Petra, the ruins of which show Egyptian influence. As to the name of the priest of Midian, one finds that he was probably nameless in the original narrative (see Exeg.) and that later versions of the story added various names: Reuel, Jethro, Hobab, Jether, and perhaps Cain (see vss. 16, 18; 3:1; 4:18; Num. 10:29; Judg. 4:11; and Judg. 1:16, where he is either a Kenite or, as some scholars read the text, had the name Cain).

The Arab background of the story centers upon the rare and precious well of water in the desert land. This incident reminds us of 15:27; Gen. 29; 24:11; Num. 33:9; John 4:6. Says Charles M. Doughty:

Sweet and light in these high deserts is the uncorrupt air, but the water is scant. . . . Hirfa doled out to me . . . hardly an ounce or two of the precious water every morning, that I might wash "as the townspeople." She thought it unthrif to pour out water thus when all day the thirsty tribesmen have not enough to drink. Many times between their waterings, there is not a pint of water left in the greatest sheykh's tents; and when the good-man bids his housewife fill the bowl to make his guests' coffee, it is answered from their side, "We have no water."*

Jethro's encampment is this time not too far from the well, and his daughters (as may be seen today in that country) are in charge of the flocks. They have made the journey, let down the skin pails to the deep springs and filled the drinking troughs, when a gang of herdsmen come rushing over the desert and try to steal the water for their own beasts. It meant that the poor girls would have to go through the

* Wanderings in Arabia (New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1908), I, 72.

17 And the shepherds came and drove them away: but Moses stood up and helped them, and watered their flock.

18 And when they came to Reuel their father, he said, How is it that ye are come so soon to-day?

19 And they said, An Egyptian delivered us out of the hand of the shepherds, and also drew water enough for us, and watered the flock.

20 And he said unto his daughters, And where is he? why is it that ye have left the man? call him, that he may eat bread.

father's flock. 17 The shepherds came and drove them away; but Moses stood up and helped them, and watered their flock.

18 When they came to their father Reu'el, he said, "How is it that you have come so soon today?" 19 They said, "An Egyptian delivered us out of the hand of the shepherds, and even drew water for us and watered the flock."

20 He said to his daughters, "And where is he? Why have you left the man? Call him, that he may eat bread."

them, had returned to the free and keen air of his forebears" (Martin Buber, Moses [London: East and West Library, 1946], p. 38). The M.T. says that he sat down by a well, the definite center of a clan or tribe. The name of the priest of Midian is not given here in the Hebrew, but the LXX adds the phrase "tending the sheep of Jethro their father." The name of Reuel in vs. 18 is probably a gloss. There seem to be two names for the priest, Jethro and Hobab. The E tradition is consistent in calling him Jethro (3:1; 4:18; 18:1, 2, 5, 6, 9, 10, 12). In Num. 10:29 the J tradition says that "Moses said to Hobab the son of Reuel the Midianite, Moses' father-in-law. . . ." Reuel is apparently the father-in-law's father. It appears that Reuel in vs. 18 is the result of a glossator's misreading of Num. 10:29. The evidence may be construed to mean that Hobab was Moses' brother-in-law, but with more doubtful results (cf. RSV, Num. 10:29; Judg. 4:11; also Kittel, Biblia Hebraica, 3rd ed., ad loc.). In the KJV "Raguel" (Num. 10:29) comes from the LXX. The Hebrew רעואל (Reuel) was transliterated into Greek as Ῥαγουήλ. Inasmuch as since the days of Gideon Israelites and Midianites were enemies, the probability that Moses was actually connected with them is very strong. Tradition could hardly have produced the account.

17-19. Other shepherds coming up did not simply deprive the sisters of their position in the queue; they appropriated the water they had drawn for their father's flock. Sitting by the well, Moses had seen the whole episode. He was aroused. His passionate sense of justice made him act in behalf of the wronged. The rendering, "Moses went to their rescue" (Amer. Trans.), aptly captures the flavor of the Hebrew verb here. It is intimated that he made the shepherds "back down" and then replenished the water they had unfairly used. Hence, to their father's surprise, the women arrived home much earlier than usual. They reported the benevolence of an Egyptian who delivered them from the shepherds. The real concern of the narrator is to present Moses. This is the character of the young man (Acts 7:23) whom God had designed for leadership.

20-22. Jethro was distressed because his daughters had not brought Moses with them. The sacred duty of hospitality demanded that he should entertain him. Besides, hard labor of hauling up and pouring all over again; and it was probably already growing late in the evening. Our hero intervenes and, like all heroes, is more than able to drive off the whole crowd of rowdies. As they water the flock, and then take their way over the sandy miles back to their father's tents, the girls look kindly at the Egyptian stranger who has rescued them, especially one of the daughters whose name was Zipporah ("Little Bird"). Moses sees them safely home, and is about to leave when Jethro asks them how they had got back so soon.

(Usually they had had to draw water both for the herdsmen and for themselves.) They tell about the (handsome) stranger, and their father does just what they had been hoping he would do. He bids them invite the young man for supper. Out of such chance happenings comes romance, and we see Moses content to dwell with the man. He becomes one of the household, and everything turns out as perhaps Zipporah had planned and hoped when she first saw him standing in the shade of the palm tree by the well. The wedding takes place and soon 21 And Moses was content to dwell with the man: and he gave Moses Zipporah his daughter.

22 And she bare him a son, and he called his name Gershom: for he said, I have been a stranger in a strange land.

23 ¶ And it came to pass in process of time, that the king of Egypt died: and the children of Israel sighed by reason of the bondage, and they cried, and their cry came up unto God by reason of the bondage.

21 And Moses was content to dwell with the man, and he gave Moses his daughter Zipporah. 22 She bore a son, and he called his name Gershom; for he said, "I have been a sojourner^d in a foreign land."

23 In the course of those many days the king of Egypt died. And the people of Israel groaned under their bondage, and cried out for help, and their cry under bondage he sensed that Moses was no ordinary guest. The girls returned to the well to call him. Moses, finding the priest's home congenial, became a part of it. Many centuries later, in the days of the P writers, this marriage with Zipporah would have been condemned (Num. 25:6-9). Zipporah is probably the "Cushite woman" whom Aaron and Miriam rebuke Moses for having married (Hab. 3:7; Num. 12:1). The narrator interprets the name of Moses' son, Gershom, as though it were Gersham, i.e., "sojourner there." There is no agreement on the actual meaning of Gershom.

^d Heb ger

23a. According to later chronology the many days that Moses dwelt in Midian totaled about forty years. The king of Egypt died while Moses was in exile.

4. THE COVENANT WITH ABRAHAM (2:23b-25)

23b. The P editor sets the stage for the call of Moses in his own way. The death of the king, whether Seti I or Ramses II, brought no relief to the slaves. Their cries were the baby who is called Gershom ("Far from Home") is born.

One can see from Num. 25:6-18; 12:1 ff. (where Zipporah is certainly referred to; cf. Hab. 3:7), that this marriage with a woman of another nation was not entirely acceptable to the Hebrews.

2:23b-4:17, 20b, 27-31; 6:2-7:7. The Call of Moses.—The story of the call of Moses to the leadership of his people is a good example of the way in which various accounts have been intertwined in this book and edited by later writers.

The linguistic and historical learning and sagacity of many scholars have been able after many years of hard work to suggest some of the strands out of which the present narrative was woven. The result shows us the development of the religion of the Israelites over almost a thousand years. No better sample of the texture of the tapestry could be given. Here are the stories of at least four periods, as we try to disentangle them after studying the words and characteristic style and ideas of each contributor. (For fuller discussion of sources and variant views see Exeg. The words are as far as possible those of existing translations, though naturally there was some compression of each tale in the process of welding them together.) We call the authors of the original narratives the Yahwist (J), the Elohist (E), the priestly writer (P), and the editor.

Even in translation, when the different accounts are disentangled, one can feel the difference in spirit and point of view. The oldest story is contained in the first five sentences of the Yahwist's narrative. It tells how Moses discovered the dwelling place of Yahweh in a sacred tree. The fact that the Hebrew word for "thornbush" is seneh reminds one of Sinai, but the mountain is not mentioned. Yahweh's presence is manifested by flames in the tree, which burn but do not consume. The god of the tree, the god of fire, is identified in the rest of this story with the God of the fathers, the God of Israel. From a place-god he becomes a race-god. The cult and ritual of tree and fire and sacred ground recede into the background, and historical and political circumstances take their place. This God whom Moses has discovered in the tree now calls him to be the leader of Israel's deliverance from Egypt; God knows of the people's hardships before he is told. Signs are given to Moses which he is to perform in order to convince the people that God has appeared to him. As for his own distrust of his powers of speech, God will inspire him to eloquence. The people believed the words and signs and worshiped.

The Elohist's story tells not of an Egyptian

prince, but of a humble shepherd, feeding his flocks, to whom the idea of going to Pharaoh was incredible. It tells not of a god of a tree and of flame, but of a god of a mountain, a god without a name. Horeb is probably Sinai under another name. The Elohist account is given us only in part. The sacred tree has become a sacred rod which is God's own staff or scepter and is handed to Moses by God himself. The great advance in the Elohist's thinking about God centers on the question of God's name, for he seems to have realized that a god had a personal name only when there were more gods than one. God has no personal name when he is God. He is the one that is: I AM. The God of Sinai is the one God, the only God. Other gods do not exist. Man finds God whom he seeks; God finds the man he needs. This man is his staff; he gives his old one to him (cf. Judg. 6:21). In Babylonia, Shamash, the sun-god gives his scepter to Hammurabi, and in Greece, Hermes, to Pelops. It is not a matter of putting off his shoes in ritual form; Moses in spiritual awe hides his face.

The editorial additions come next in time. Sections 3:18-22; 4:9; 4:21-23, have not been included in the stories, as they seem to have been added by a later scribe from the succeeding narrative, with the purpose of showing that Yahweh knew exactly in advance how things were going to turn out. The insertion in the Elohist's story after the giving of the answer, I AM, seems to be concerned with the identity of God and Yahweh. In the Yahwist's story the passage about Moses being replaced by Aaron is the work of one of the priestly class who felt that Aaron and the priests were not given enough honor in the early story.

Next in time comes the narrative of the priestly writer. The charming picturesqueness of the earlier narratives vanishes. We are not told even where the interview takes place; there is no mention of sacred trees or mountains, or of magic tricks.

God here is a spirit who is making a covenant with the people, who has a plan in history. God's new name, Yahweh, takes the place of the old name by which he was known to the fathers. There is more of the spirit of religion than of nationalism in P. But contrary to the other stories, the people here will not obey, do not fall upon the ground and worship. Yet Moses and Aaron are to go forward, and God will fulfill his purposes in history.

J's Story.—Yahweh once appeared to Moses in a flame of fire out of the midst of a bush. He saw that the bush burned with fire, but was not consumed. And Moses said, "I will now turn aside, and see this great sight, why the bush is not burned." When Yahweh saw that Moses turned aside to see, he called out of the bush, "Draw not nigh hither: put off thy shoes from off thy feet; for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground." And Yahweh said, "I have surely seen the affliction of my people in Egypt, and have heard their cry, by reason of their taskmasters; for I know their sorrows. And I am come down to deliver them out of the hand of the Egyptians, and to bring them up out of that land unto a land flowing with milk and honey. Go, and gather the elders of Israel together, and say unto them, Yahweh, the God of your fathers, appeared unto me, saying, I have surely visited you, and seen that which is done to you in Egypt; and I have said, I will bring you up out of the affliction of Egypt unto a land flowing with milk and honey."

And Moses answered and said, "They will not believe me, nor hearken unto my voice, but say, Yahweh hath not appeared unto thee." Yahweh answered him, "What is that in thy hand?" And he said, "A rod." And he said, "Cast it on the ground." And he cast it on the ground, and it became a serpent; and Moses fled from it. And Yahweh said unto Moses, "Put forth thy hand, and take it by the tail." And he did so, and it became a rod in his hand: that they may believe that Yahweh, God of their fathers, hath appeared unto thee. And Yahweh commanded him again, "Put now thy hand into thy bosom." And he did so, and when he took it out, behold, his hand was leprous, as white as snow. And he said, "Put thy hand into thy bosom again." And he did so, and when he took it out, it was turned again as his other flesh. "And it shall come to pass, if they will not believe thee, neither hearken to the voice of the first sign, that they will believe the voice of the second sign." And Moses said unto Yahweh, "O Lord, I am not eloquent, neither heretofore, nor since thou hast spoken unto thy servant: for I am slow of speech, and of a slow tongue." And Yahweh said unto him, "Who hath made man's mouth? or who maketh a man dumb, or deaf, or seeing, or blind? Is it not I, Yahweh? Now therefore go, and I will be with thy mouth, and teach thee what thou shalt speak." And Moses went and gathered together all the elders of the children of Israel, and spake all the words the Lord had spoken unto him, and did the signs in the sight of the people. And the people believed: and when they heard that Yahweh had visited the children of Israel, and seen their affliction, then they bowed their heads and worshipped.

E's Story.—Now Moses was keeping the flock of Jethro, his father-in-law: and he led the flock to the back of the wilderness, and came to the mountain, Horeb. And God called to him and said: "Moses, Moses." And he said, "Here am

I." And God said, "I am the God of thy father, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob." And Moses hid his face; for he was afraid to look upon God. And God said, "Now, behold, the cry of the children of Israel is come unto me: moreover I have seen the oppression wherewith the Egyptians oppress them. Come now, therefore. I will send thee unto Pharaoh, that thou mayest bring forth my people Israel out of Egypt." And Moses said unto God, "Who am I, that I should go unto Pharaoh, and bring forth Israel out of Egypt?" And he said, "Certainly I will be with thee: when thou hast brought forth the people out of Egypt, ye shall serve God upon this mountain." And Moses said unto God, "Behold, when I come unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, The God of your fathers hath sent me unto you; and they say unto me, What is his name? what shall I say unto them?" And God said unto Moses, "I AM THAT I AM." And he said, "Thus shalt thou say unto the children of Israel, I AM hath sent me unto you. And thou shalt take in thy hand this rod, wherewith thou shalt do signs." And Moses took the rod of God in his hand.

Editorial Additions.—In J's story after the words "and teach thee what thou shalt speak" (4:12), this passage has been inserted:

And he said, "O Lord, send whom thou wilt send." And the anger of Yahweh was kindled against Moses, and he said, "Is there not Aaron thy brother the Levite? I know that he can speak well. And also, behold, he cometh forth to meet thee: and when he seeth thee, he will be glad in his heart. Thou shalt speak unto him, and put the words in his mouth: I will be with thy mouth, and with his mouth, and will teach you what ye shall do. He shall be thy spokesman unto the people. He shall be to thee a mouth, and thou shalt be to him as God." And Yahweh had said to Aaron, "Go and meet Moses in the wilderness." And he went, and met him in the mountain of God and kissed him. And Moses told Aaron all the words of Yahweh wherewith he had sent him, and all the signs wherewith he had charged him.

In E's story after the words, "I AM hath sent me unto you" (3:14), this passage has been inserted:

And God said moreover unto Moses, "Thus shalt thou say unto the children of Israel, Yahweh, the God of your father, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, hath sent me unto you: this is my name forever, thus shall I be known for all generations."

P's Story.—And God spake unto Moses, and said unto him, "I am Yahweh, I appeared unto Abraham, unto Isaac, and unto Jacob as El-

Shaddai, but by my name Yahweh I was not known to them. And I also established my covenant with them, to give them the land of Canaan, the land in which they sojourned as strangers. And I have also heard the groaning of the children of Israel, whom the Egyptians keep in bondage; and I have remembered my covenant. Wherefore say unto the children of Israel, I am Yahweh, I will bring you out from under the burdens of the Egyptians, and I will rid you out of their bondage, and I will redeem you with a stretched out arm and with mighty deeds. I will take you for my people and will be your God: and ye shall know that I am Yahweh, your God, who bringeth you out from under the burdens of the Egyptians. And I will bring you in unto the land, which I swore to give to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob; and I will give it you for an heritage, I Yahweh!" And Moses spake so unto the children of Israel; but they hearkened not unto Moses, for there was no spirit in them by reason of their cruel bondage. And Yahweh spake unto Moses, saying, "Go in, speak unto Pharaoh, king of Egypt, that he let the children of Israel go out of his land." But Moses answered Yahweh, saying, "Behold, the children of Israel have not hearkened unto me; how then shall Pharaoh hear me, for I am not skilled in speech?" And Yahweh said unto Moses, "See, I have made thee a god to Pharaoh; and Aaron thy brother shall be thy prophet. Thou shalt tell all that I command thee: and Aaron thy brother shall speak unto Pharaoh, that he let the children of Israel go out of his land. And I will harden Pharaoh's heart, and I will work many wonders and signs in Egypt. But Pharaoh will not hearken unto you, and I will lay my hand upon the Egyptians, and bring forth my hosts, my people Israel, out of Egypt by mighty deeds. And the Egyptians shall know that I am Yahweh, when I have stretched forth my hand against the Egyptians, and brought out the children of Israel from among them." And Moses and Aaron did so; as Yahweh commanded them, so they did. Moses was fourscore years old, and Aaron fourscore and three years old, when they spake unto Pharaoh.

When each story is read thus by itself we feel that we are following the history of the growth of the religious sense not only in Israel, but in mankind. There is no absolute certainty about the details of the allocation of the material to its different sources, but the general impression made by reading the stories as given is clear.

Man seems to begin to think of God as the god of a place, the tree god, the mountain god, or the fire god, or as the god of miracles; then as the god of a race; till at last in the priestly writer's story trees, mountains, fire, miracles fall so great that God noticed them and remembered his ancient promise. Neither the P editor nor the earlier narrators have thus far hinted that the Hebrews cried to God. They seem to avoid this purposely, to point up the initiative of God in Israel's deliverance. But what strikes us here is that the P editor seems to have missed the implicit assumption of the narrative throughout that God was aware all along of what was going on; indeed, that he was the chief actor in it.

out of the picture and we have a god working in history for the downtrodden against the oppressor, giving strength to the weak in their struggle against injustice.

Every new insight in religion is apt to dismiss the old ideas as false, just as each denomination with unconscious humor is sure its own is the true religion and manifests its charity by saying to other faiths, "Let us not try to unite, but continue to work for Christ, you in your way and we in his." But religion is the growing part of man's nature, his probing out from the known into the not fully known. All our insights about it are imperfect. This is true both of our own ideas and of the ideas of other times and other faiths. But religious men are men at their best, and there is very apt to be a kernel of truth in the old and the other's ideas. The priestly writer's story is typical of religious reformations which try to cleanse the old faith from all superstitious matters and in so doing are apt to pour out the baby with the bath; it was a purer faith, but one can imagine that it lost much of its popular appeal. Puritans destroying the lovely paintings and statues of medieval churches, "liberal" Christians trying to substitute "the white light of the ideal" for the warm love of the believer for Jesus, are of the same school of thought. These people have a very good time enjoying a rarefied sense of truth, and they can never understand how their halls are apt to be empty, while apparently sensible people continue to worship in the presence of beauty and the saints.

The poet in religion comes back, after all, to find God in places—Gen. 28:16; Exod. 3:4; "Only God can make a tree"; in the fire of aureoles around the heads of the saints; or in the spirit and mission of a race of men; or in the miracles of autumn foliage, burning but not burned; or in the unexplained great miracle, the spark of genius in the mind of Einstein, or in the speeches of Churchill that seemed to save the world in one of its darkest hours.

The Yahwist and the Elohist may have been mistaken and ignorant, but they too had their moments of insight, such as come to unspoiled minds in a simple world. Must the priestly writer's ideas also be dismissed as superstitious by modern man? Is there any scientific evidence for the presence in history of a supernatural guiding power such as he supposed? While we do not express ourselves in the way in which these biblical writers did, we do have an underlying faith of this kind. We believe that certain public policies are for the good of all the people, and that these decisions are certain in the end to triumph over special interests as opposed to the general good. We attribute this certainty to the good will in the majority of men. As to how this good will happens always to come eventually to the surface in the majority of men, we are not apt to speculate. Our faith lies in the operation not of fires and war and earthquakes to accomplish the hoped-for results, but in the spirit of man based on the best scientific knowledge of his day. This power in man must theoretically be accounted for by philosophers. The weakness of the old "liberal" religious view, sometimes called humanism, is well expressed by F. H. Bradley in his criticism of Matthew Arnold's Literature and Dogma:

"Is there a God?" asks the reader. "Oh yes," replies Mr. Arnold, "and I can verify him in experience." "And what is he then?" cries the reader. "Be virtuous, and as a rule you will be happy," is the answer. "Well, and God?" "That is God," says Mr. Arnold; "there is no deception, and what more do you want?" I suppose we do want a good deal more. Most of us, certainly the public which Mr. Arnold addresses, want something they can worship; and they will not find that in a hypostasized copy-book heading, which is not much more adorable than "Honesty is the best policy."⁷

The godless, automatically disintegrating view of human history is most ably given by Oswald Spengler;⁸ the creative, God-implicit view, by Arnold J. Toynbee.⁹

But for the ordinary man, the picture language of a loving father working out his plans in human history, using the men he needs to do his work, is fundamentally sound. It would take a very profound thinker to make an intricate diagram showing the exact relationship of man to nature, and of man to this heavenly Father, and no one knows enough yet to get

⁷ Quoted in T. S. Eliot, For Lancelot Andrewes (Garden City, N. Y.: Doubleday, Doran, & Co., 1929), pp. 81-82.

⁸ The Decline of the West (New York: Alfred A. Knopf, 1926-28). The word "God" does not even appear in the index to this encyclopedic work.

⁹ A Study of History (New York: Oxford University Press, 1934; Abridgement, 1947).

24 And God heard their groaning, and God remembered his covenant with Abraham, with Isaac, and with Jacob.

25 And God looked upon the children of Israel, and God had respect unto them.

3 Now Moses kept the flock of Jethro his father-in-law, the priest of Midian: and he led the flock to the back side of the came up to God. 24 And God heard their groaning, and God remembered his covenant with Abraham, with Isaac, and with Jacob. 25 And God saw the people of Israel, and God knew their condition.

3 Now Moses was keeping the flock of his father-in-law, Jethro, the priest of 24. For P the covenant with Abraham, with Isaac, and with Jacob (Gen. 17:7-8, 19) is the motive for the deliverance from Egypt. The earlier writers also know of a covenant or promise to Abraham but do not use it as a sanction for the Exodus. As over against P, through whom the Abrahamic covenant becomes prominent in the Bible, they stress the radical novelty of the revelation of God in the deliverance of Israel from Egypt. For P revelation consists essentially of oracles; for his predecessors it consists first of all of God's action in history.

B. THE JE ACCOUNT OF THE CALL AND COMMISSION OF MOSES (3:1-6:1)

The account of the call and commission of Moses comes to us through the J and E historians. The scene of the vocation is the mountain of God in Midian. There is a all the lines and delimitations correctly; yet we are getting nearer the truth about such profound matters. Wiser than any that has hitherto appeared would be the theologian who could work out the myriad ways in which God is fitly described as our Father, and the ways in which the figure does not apply exactly. But we are on our way. When the Roman Catholics, after being horribly shocked by the tendency of Abelard to adopt the doctrines of Aristotle, were guided years afterward by Albertus Magnus and Thomas Aquinas to adopt those very doctrines as their own, and when the Protestant church tried to learn from the best scientific thought of its day, we see in such changes of doctrine the attempt being made to think out correctly the relationship of man to God. Some of this work can be preached with edification, but much of it must be the background of knowledge in the mind of the preacher, and must be expressed for the congregation by implication or in picture language. Most of us understand next to nothing about how the radio works, yet we can use it. "The knowledge of the priest is the eighth sacrament of the church," said St. Francis of Sales, and the preacher's task is to see that his figures, illustrations, and presuppositions are fitting symbols of the profound truth. As the sun, which is not of this world at all, is the source and sustainer of all the life of nature, so God is to the life of man. Humanism, which gives up as hopeless the attempt to justify the ways of God to man, which refuses to ask ultimate questions, is spiritual isolationism, as dangerous to man as national isolationism.

The study of these different stories of the call of Moses will help the reader to understand what one man who spent his whole life in Bible scholarship meant when he said:

Bible, wonderful book, teacher of mankind, foundation of our spiritual being! Thou art like that serene City of God, set upon earth's towering mountain tops, touching the heavens. The peoples of the world look to thee and drink of the living waters of thy streams. Whole generations may turn from thee and think nought of thee, because they know thee not; but mankind ever turns back again to thee.

For more than two centuries man has striven to understand the Scriptures; but who dare say that he has plumbed those deeps. Every century has seen them in new light. To our forefathers they were one, a single word out of the mouth of God. To us it has been given to read the manifold history of which they are the record. Those who came before us have dipped impartially into these writings, and have found again in them what was deepest and best in themselves. We who come after them strive with care to catch the spirit of the various times in which they were written, and to discover what the authors themselves meant to say; and in no wise do we yield to our forefathers in our reverence and love for this majestic book. In fact the story, so human, so divine, as we begin to be able to see it in the Bible, is deeper and more precious than anything our forefathers thought they found therein.¹

3:1. Moses Keeps the Flock of Jethro.—Mohammed said, "He will never be a prophet who desert, and came to the mountain of God, even to Horeb.

¹ Hermann Gunkel, Die Urgeschichte und die Patriarchen (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1921; "Die Schriften des Alten Testaments in Auswahl"), p. v.

2 And the Angel of the LORD appeared unto him in a flame of fire out of the midst of a bush: and he looked, and, behold, the bush burned with fire, and the bush was not consumed.

3 And Moses said, I will now turn aside, and see this great sight, why the bush is not burnt.

Mid'ian; and he led his flock to the west side of the wilderness, and came to Horeb, the mountain of God. 2 And the angel of the LORD appeared to him in a flame of fire out of the midst of a bush; and he looked, and lo, the bush was burning, yet it was not consumed. 3 And Moses said, "I will turn aside and see this great sight, why the bush second P account of the vocation of Moses (6:2-7:7). Because the P writer assumed that Moses received his call in Egypt rather than in the desert his account does not immediately follow this one. Rather, it is inserted at a point in the JE narrative where Moses has already returned to Egypt and begun his work.

Moses was the greatest of the prophets (Deut. 34:10). Some considered him more than a prophet (Num. 12:6-7). As prophet he is called. The call symbolizes the prophet's endowment with the living authority of God. As prophet Moses was God's spokesman, the interpreter of the divine power by virtue of which he has the prerogative of judgment. There are recognized literary forms in which biblical writers set forth a prophet's call. A vision in which God is depicted in historical or natural activity, in cultic ceremonial, or in mythological metaphor, is followed by a response of the candidate in which awe and receptiveness commingle. Then God declares his purpose. Finally the prophet is instructed in the ways and means of declaring God's "word" or purpose. The literary form of the call of Moses corresponds very closely to that of the call of Isaiah (Isa. 6).

1. THE VISION (3:1-6)

3:1. Moses had adjusted himself to the shepherd's life. Perhaps in search of better grazing, he led his flock to the west side of the wilderness. The suggestion of Gunkel and Gressmann that the sheep were "divine guides" to the holy mountain (cf. I Sam. 6:7) does not seem to fit. Moving westward, probably out of the Arabah depression, he came to Horeb, the mountain of God (cf. "The Location of Sinai," Intro., pp. 836-37).

2. The angel of the Lord was actually the Lord himself (vs. 4). Angel means messenger; angels in this early period are not personal entities, as later, but people or things that temporarily embody deity (Gen. 21:15-19; Deut. 33:16; Judg. 6:11, 14; Ps. 104:4). The word LORD stands for YHWH, probably Yahweh, which in Hebrew is read as "Adonai," meaning Lord (cf. vss. 13-15 below). Flame indicates the bodily manifestation of God, his actual presence (19:18; Ezek. 1:27; I Tim. 6:16). We have a remnant of it in the halo of the saints. The other metaphor of the vision (the bush) has its origins in animism. The whole picture is drawn to make the point that Moses was visited by the living God.

3. Moses is awed but also receptive. He responds to the mystery. He is a seeker, a discoverer.

was not first a herdsman." The incubation of a great soul takes place in solitude and quietness. The man who is to forge a nation out of a slave gang, the man who is to codify a new law and found a new religion, spends his years keeping a flock in the wilderness. The number of years implied in 7:7 may be symbolic, but we can assume that years were so spent by Moses as a young man after his marriage. While history may not literally be the lives of its great men, yet it does seem to take the push of a great personality to bring to a head the slow gathering forces of a new age.

2-3. The Gaze of Wonder.—Clement of Alexandria quotes Matthew as saying, "Look with wonder at that which is before you."³ One of the sayings of Jesus discovered by the explorers of the Egypt Fund reads: "Let not him who seeks . . . cease until he finds, and when he finds he shall be astonished; astonished, he shall reach the kingdom, and having reached the ³ Miscellanies II. 9.

4 And when the LORD saw that he turned aside to see, God called unto him out of the midst of the bush, and said, Moses, Moses. And he said, Here am I.

5 And he said, Draw not nigh hither: put off thy shoes from off thy feet; for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground.

6 Moreover he said, I am the God of thy father, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. And Moses hid his face; for he was afraid to look upon God.

is not burnt." 4 When the LORD saw that he turned aside to see, God called to him out of the bush, "Moses, Moses!" And he said, "Here am I." 5 Then he said, "Do not come near; put off your shoes from your feet, for the place on which you are standing is holy ground." 6 And he said, "I am the God of your father, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob." And Moses hid his face, for he was afraid to look at God.

4.6. At his response the presence speaks his name, Moses, Moses! When the vision breaks out in speech the presence of deity is confirmed (Isa. 6:3). In Isaiah and some of the other prophets there occurs at this point a confession of sin and an absolution. This is significantly missing here. In the exodus event God is disclosed as power, rather than either as justice or love. Moral demand and forgiveness of sin play scarcely any role. It must be noted that this emphasis on power and authority remains basic in the Bible. The moments of judgment and forgiveness are predicated upon it. Moses is in the presence of power; the place whereon thou standest is holy ground. The distance between God and man is here indicated. Its measure is power. Moses hid his face, not in shame but in fear. He was not repentant but awed. In Luke 20:37 Moses is credited with the next word of the vision, I am the God of thy father (cf. 15:2; 18:4). This formula draws together the ethnic and religious past of the Hebrews and their existence as the Israel of the exodus covenant. Under it the God revealed in Israel's deliverance is the cue for the reinterpretation of all tribal traditions, even of universal history, so that history hitherto is seen as having consisted of a series of "covenants" (Adam, Noah, Abraham). Under it also the religious, ethnic, and cultural values antecedent to the Exodus, however difficult it may be for us to describe these, are affirmed to have been a preparation for the revelation of the Exodus, a conditioning element in it, and thereafter subsumed under it. The formula implies that creation and redemption are one process, but in this context of the exodus event, it also implies that creation is known in the light of redemption.

kingdom he shall rest." 3 There are two impulses in man: one is to accept and take for granted; the other is to look with inquiry and wonder. Out of the latter impulse religion is born. Instead of saying, "A tree on fire," and passing on, Moses turns aside, and to his astonishment notices that it is not immediately reduced to ashes. It is burning but not burned. That is mysterious. Out of wonder and mystery spring all philosophy and science and art. "Why?" Moses asks; and in that "Why?" the mind and the soul of man are born. 4

4.5. The Symbol of Reverence.—As in the Mohammedan mosque today, a sign of reverence and awe: Put off thy shoes from off thy feet

³ Oxyrhynchus Papyri, ed. Bernard P. Grenfell and Arthur S. Hunt (London: Egypt Exploration Fund, 1903), Pt. IV, p. 4.

⁴ See William H. Davies' poem "Leisure."

(cf. Josh. 5:15). This mingled sense of wonder, reverence, and awe is what distinguishes religion from morals. It is the idea of the Holy about which Rudolf Otto writes.⁵ There are essential elements in religion which cannot be comprised in any intellectual system, nor wholly exhausted in practice and conduct, and which are only faintly suggested by symbolism and sacrament. Ritual is only justified when words cannot exactly explain what it means. It is an attempt to say something which cannot otherwise be wholly expressed. "Now a thing was secretly brought to me, and mine ear received a little thereof" (Job 4:12). In a land where the heat and rays of the sun may be deadly, it would seem to be a safer gesture of reverence to remove the shoes than to remove the hat. Rites

⁵ The Idea of the Holy, tr. J. W. Harvey (New York: Oxford University Press, 1929), ch. x.

7 ¶ And the LORD said, I have surely seen the affliction of my people which are in Egypt, and have heard their cry by reason of their taskmasters; for I know their sorrows;

8 And I am come down to deliver them out of the hand of the Egyptians, and to bring them up out of that land unto a good land and a large, unto a land flowing with milk and honey; unto the place of the Canaanites, and the Hittites, and the Amorites, and the Perizzites, and the Hivites, and the Jebusites.

9 Now therefore, behold, the cry of the children of Israel is come unto me: and I have also seen the oppression wherewith the Egyptians oppress them.

10 Come now therefore, and I will send thee unto Pharaoh, that thou mayest bring forth my people the children of Israel out of Egypt.

11 ¶ And Moses said unto God, Who am I, that I should go unto Pharaoh, and that I should bring forth the children of Israel out of Egypt?

7 Then the LORD said, "I have seen the affliction of my people who are in Egypt, and have heard their cry because of their taskmasters; I know their sufferings, 8 and I have come down to deliver them out of the hand of the Egyptians, and to bring them up out of that land to a good and broad land, a land flowing with milk and honey, to the place of the Canaanites, the Hittites, the Amorites, the Perizzites, the Hivites, and the Jebusites. 9 And now, behold, the cry of the people of Israel has come to me, and I have seen the oppression with which the Egyptians oppress them. 10 Come, I will send you to Pharaoh that you may bring forth my people, the sons of Israel, out of Egypt." 11 But Moses said to God, "Who am I that I should go to Pharaoh, and bring

2. THE AUDIENCE (3:7-4:17)

God has made himself known to Moses. Now he reveals his plan and assigns Moses his role in it.

a) THE LORD'S PLAN (3:7-10)

7-8. The slaves did not have to call on the Lord. Here, for the J tradition, as in 2:23-25, the Lord hears before men call. And he has come down to deliver the slaves (cf. 19:18; Gen. 11:5). This emphasis upon God's actual intrusion into the historical scene is not found in the P document. The plan of the Lord is described after it was carried out, by a writer who shares in its beneficent results. He here attests his faith that Israel possesses Canaan by the grace of God and for his purpose. He sets out his understanding of God's attitude and relationship to Israel in Palestine—an attitude and relationship that are rooted in the Exodus.

10. It is "the fullness of time." God will reveal himself as the great destroyer and the great deliverer. Moses is to be his instrument to bring Israel out of Egypt. This is the point of his appearance. God will endow with authority and harness to his purpose the natural audacity, courage, and sense of justice, so strong in this man (2:11-15).

b) GOD INSTRUCTS MOSES (3:11-22)

11. God must instruct Moses before he can serve. Not only must he be told what to do in Egypt; more basically, he must be taught his relationship to the Lord in this mission. The cry Who am I? is not the pure Domine non sum dignus of humble faith (cf. Jer. 1:6). The cry shows indeed that Moses, the confident hero of 2:11-15, now knows suitable and beautiful in one land seem artificial and strained in another. (The church once had to decide as to the legality of a baptism performed with sand in the waterless desert; the professional and artificial mechanics of some modern methods of safeguarding our communion service are apt to destroy the symbolism and mar its ancient loveliness.) Reverence is the response of body and soul to lofty mysteries, deeply felt and only partially understood.

12 And he said, Certainly I will be with thee; and this shall be a token unto thee, that I have sent thee: When thou hast brought forth the people out of Egypt, ye shall serve God upon this mountain.

13 And Moses said unto God, Behold, when I come unto the children of Israel, and shall say unto them, The God of your fathers hath sent me unto you; and they shall say to me, What is his name? what shall I say unto them?

14 And God said unto Moses, I AM THAT I AM: and he said, Thus shalt thou say unto the children of Israel, I AM hath sent me unto you.

the sons of Israel out of Egypt?" 12 He said, "But I will be with you; and this shall be the sign for you, that I have sent you: when you have brought forth the people out of Egypt, you shall serve God upon this mountain."

13 Then Moses said to God, "If I come to the people of Israel and say to them, 'The God of your fathers has sent me to you,' and they ask me, 'What is his name?' what shall I say to them?" 14 God said to Moses, "I AM WHO I AM."^e And he said, "Say this to the people of Israel, 'I AM has sent me

^e OF I AM WHAT I AM OF I WILL BE WHAT I WILL BE

he cannot impress Israel. He is modest. But his modesty partakes of faithlessness and frustration (4:10-14). God must transform it into the humility of faith.

12. Thus, God says, I will be with you. This must be read in the light of vss. 7-10. Moses is not divinely assured of helpful assistance on a project essentially his. He is told again that this is God's project. God is at the center of it and Moses is only a unit in his work. The following clause, this shall be the sign for you, carries through this instruction. The sign differs from those that follow. It is the pledge of God, not as proof but as promise (cf. I Sam. 2:34; 14:10; Isa. 7:14; Jer. 44:29). The promise can be relevant to Moses only if he believes God is the deliverer. And the content of the promise seeks to elicit this faith. It stresses the theocentric character or cosmic significance of the Exodus. God is not merely going to fulfill Moses' defeated hopes or ease the burden of slaves; he is going to establish a people for himself. The covenant will be sealed at this very mountain. This deliverance is God's work.

13-15. Moses responds in faith and proceeds to a practical question. How shall he convince the Israelites that God has really spoken to him? In the Bible a name, whether of man, angel, or deity, sets forth the character of its bearer. If the plan Moses presents to the elders is to impress them as God's revelation and not Moses' own idea, he must be able to give the name of God, a new name that goes with the new revelation.

13-15. The Mystery of God's Name.—Although his name is too sacred to be pronounced, we begin to see from the narrative what kind of a God this was who revealed himself to Moses. He was a mysterious power, in whose presence one must put off the shoes from one's feet and cover one's face; he had a dwelling place in nature, in mountain and tree and fire; he knew all that was happening among men; he hated injustice, helped the oppressed to freedom, and punished the tyrant; he could endow men with seemingly miraculous powers; he needed the help and co-operation of men to carry out his ends; he knew the heart of man, so as to choose the right man as his minister; he was the God of the fathers, even when known by them under a different name; he was omnipotent in directing the course of history through men and nature toward his own ends.

This citation reads something like our own conception of God; we might define the miraculous powers somewhat differently, but wonder just as much at the greatness of great men in the world's crises; we are somewhat more hazy in our ideas about the connection between God and nature, and are more skeptical about what express companies call in their bills of lading "acts of God." We are inclined to think that earthquakes, tempests, epidemics, and droughts are sent not so much as punishments as for the purpose of goading sluggish man on to discover ways of understanding and controlling his environment. Yet God in nature for us is always one of the great sources of inspiration. In fact, all nature seems to us in moments of insight to be what it was for Jesus, a primer of the ways of God.

14. I Am That I Am.—"I am that I am, was his own definition unto Moses; and it was a short one, to confound mortality, that durst

15 And God said moreover unto Moses, Thus shalt thou say unto the children of Israel, The LORD God of your fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, hath sent me unto you: this is my name for ever, and this is my memorial unto all generations.

to you.’” 15 God also said to Moses, “Say this to the people of Israel, ‘The LORD, the God of your fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, has sent me to you’: this is my name for ever, and thus I am to be remembered through-

^f The word LORD when spelled with capital letters stands for the divine name, YHWH, which is here connected with the verb hayah, to be

Vss. 13-15 belong to the E document. Its view is that the divine name YHWH (LORD), in vs. 15, was given to Moses at Sinai, along with the plan of deliverance. It differs in this respect from the J document. What new name, if any, the J tradition associated with Sinai can no longer be determined. Consequently, the E document uses this name for the first time here, this is my name for ever, and thus I am to be remembered.

It is possible to read vs. 15 as the immediate continuation of vs. 13. Moreover may indicate that this reply of God is in addition to the one given in vs. 12. What we have in vs. 14 is a parenthetical statement, or interpretation, that analyzes the name YHWH. The analysis treats the name as a verb derived from the root hāyāh (“to be”). Since God is the speaker, the name is “transposed” to the first person of the verb. But as the RSV mg. shows, this etymological interpretation can be translated in various ways. “I AM, BECAUSE I AM” (ASV mg.) represents a further possibility. It seems possible that the interpreter wanted to stress the fullness and mystery of God and therefore purposely left his analysis open to a wide range of interpretations. He concludes by offering only the first verb of his interpretation, ’ehyeh, “I am,” or better, “I will be” (cf. Intro., pp. 837-38).

question God, or ask him what he was. Indeed he only is; all others have been and shall be.”⁶ The Atta Nimsa, one of the Jewish prayers for feast days, is the answering voice to this tremendous name:

Thou art!
The hearing of the ear,
The seeing of the eye
Cannot reach Thee;
No How or Why or Where
Can lead us to Thee.

Thou art!
Hidden is Thy secret,
Who may fathom it!
Deep, so deep,
Who can find it!⁷

But there is a very practical application of the meaning of this mysterious name. If the name of the God I worship is I AM, it seems to follow that only through what I am can I worship him aright. God and the archangel Michael were in one of the anterooms of heaven. In a continuous torrent all the prayers, oral and sung, of mankind were ascending from earth. It was a babel of sound in all tongues, and on all sides of every question, hurricanes of passionate demands, winds of speech whining with wheedling words, gusts of insistent requests for special favors. Overwhelmed with it all, Michael said to God, “If you will allow me, Sire, I would say that you made a great mistake when you let man learn to talk. If he was not able to talk, it would be possible then for you to know what he was really praying for.” And God said, “I do not listen to their words. I listen only to their lives.” He closed the window and opened the door, and all the tempest of words stopped. Instead from the earth came up clearly another prayer. Most of it was distressing, but a weak, wavering voice did arise also from the lives of men to heaven: “O Lord, if it does not cost us too much, we sometimes would like to be just and courageous and kind. Amen.” For the only prayer of mine that rises above the roof is the prayer of what I am.

In this affirmation also is the pledge and proof of our existential unity with God and with one another, as the Swedish poet Runeberg puts it: “It is strange that, though we all say our ‘I am,’ we nevertheless fancy ourselves to be so far, so essentially, separated from one another. Is not the same spirit in all of us which from our thousand mouths says his ‘I am,’ thus proving himself and us true?”⁸

3:15-21. See Expos. on 2:23b-4:17.

⁶ Thomas Browne, Religio Medici, Part I, ch. xi.
⁷ Michael Sachs, Festgebete der Israeliten (Breslau: Kockner, 1898), Part III.

⁸ Gunnar Tideström, Runeberg (Helsingfors: Mercators tryckeri, 1941), p. 395.

16 Go, and gather the elders of Israel together, and say unto them, The LORD God of your fathers, the God of Abraham, of Isaac, and of Jacob, appeared unto me, saying, I have surely visited you, and seen that which is done to you in Egypt:

17 And I have said, I will bring you up out of the affliction of Egypt unto the land of the Canaanites, and the Hittites, and the Amorites, and the Perizzites, and the Hivites, and the Jebusites, unto a land flowing with milk and honey.

18 And they shall hearken to thy voice: and thou shalt come, thou and the elders of Israel, unto the king of Egypt, and ye shall say unto him, The LORD God of the Hebrews hath met with us: and now let us go, we beseech thee, three days' journey into the wilderness, that we may sacrifice to the LORD our God.

19 ¶ And I am sure that the king of Egypt will not let you go, no, not by a mighty hand.

20 And I will stretch out my hand, and smite Egypt with all my wonders which I will do in the midst thereof: and after that he will let you go.

21 And I will give this people favor in the sight of the Egyptians: and it shall come to pass, that, when ye go, ye shall not go empty:

22 But every woman shall borrow of her neighbor, and of her that sojourneth in out all generations. 16 Go and gather the elders of Israel together, and say to them, 'The LORD, the God of your fathers, the God of Abraham, of Isaac, and of Jacob, has appeared to me, saying, "I have observed you and what has been done to you in Egypt; 17 and I promise that I will bring you up out of the affliction of Egypt, to the land of the Canaanites, the Hittites, the Amorites, the Per'izzites, the Hivites, and the Jeb'usites, a land flowing with milk and honey.'" 18 And they will hearken to your voice; and you and the elders of Israel shall go to the king of Egypt and say to him, "The LORD, the God of the Hebrews, has met with us; and now, we pray you, let us go a three days' journey into the wilderness, that we may sacrifice to the LORD our God.' 19 I know that the king of Egypt will not let you go unless compelled by a mighty hand. 20 So I will stretch out my hand and smite Egypt with all the wonders which I will do in it; after that he will let you go. 21 And I will give this people favor in the sight of the Egyptians; and when you go, you shall not go empty, 22 but each woman shall ask of her neighbor, and of her who sojourns in 16-17. Yahweh instructs Moses to go to the people with the message. The writer, after the manner of ancient narrators, repeats the content of the message (cf. vss. 7-8).

⁹ Gk Vg: Heb no, not by a mighty hand

18. The prediction about the receptivity of the elders prepares the way for Moses' exhibition of faithlessness (4:1-16). It also illustrates J's view that all the relations between Moses and the Israelites and between Moses and the Egyptians were first of all communicated by God to Moses (4:31). The strategy will be to ask for permission to go into the wilderness to sacrifice to the LORD, the God of the Hebrews. The phrase implies the worship of one God. The story of the contest between God and the Pharaoh develops a dramatic tension by having Israel increase its demand whenever the ruler grants the previous demand (10:9-11). God will demonstrate his omnipotence over Pharaoh; only under the compulsion of God's mighty hand will the people go free.

21-22. The spoliation of the Egyptians, here commanded by God, is reported to have been carried out by the people (12:35-36) at the order of Moses (11:2-3). The E writer

22. Legitimate Spoils.—Augustine's use of the metaphor of spoiling the Egyptians referred to in the Exeg. has had many applications during the centuries. The underlying idea is that good people can profit by rifling the stores of the ungodly of their material treasures, their worldly wisdom, canny ways, and bright ideas. In the First Gospel it seems to be one of the favorite ideas of Jesus. The children of the kingdom can learn much from the children of the world. "If ye then, being evil, know, . . . how much more shall your Father?" (Matt. 7:11.) They can her house, jewels of silver, and jewels of gold, and raiment: and ye shall put them upon your sons, and upon your daughters; and ye shall spoil the Egyptians.

4 And Moses answered and said, But, behold, they will not believe me, nor hearken unto my voice: for they will say, The LORD hath not appeared unto thee.

2 And the LORD said unto him, What is that in thine hand? And he said, A rod.

3 And he said, Cast it on the ground. And he cast it on the ground, and it became a serpent; and Moses fled from before it.

4 And the LORD said unto Moses, Put forth thine hand, and take it by the tail.

her house, jewelry of silver and of gold, and clothing, and you shall put them on your sons and on your daughters; thus you shall despoil the Egyptians."

4 Then Moses answered, "But behold, they will not believe me or listen to my voice, for they will say, 'The LORD did not appear to you.'" 2 The LORD said to him, "What is that in your hand?" He said, "A rod." 3 And he said, "Cast it on the ground." So he cast it on the ground, and it became a serpent; and Moses fled from it. 4 But the LORD said to Moses, "Put out your hand, indicates in this way his approval of the reported occurrence. Note again that for him Israelites and Egyptians lived together. The "spoliation of the Egyptians" became a metaphor in early Christianity for the new faith's appropriation of the cultural heritage of the Greek world (Augustine On Christian Doctrine II. 40).

c) MOSES TAUGHT MAGIC (4:1-9, 17)

4:1. The problem of authenticating to the elders God's appearance to Moses, which in E was answered by the disclosure of the divine name, is here raised by J, who tells how God instructed Moses as a sage versed in Egyptian magic (cf. Acts 7:22). Actually, and despite vs. 5, the text implies that Moses shall ply the magicians' craft before the Egyptians rather than before the elders (vs. 21; 7:8-13). The writer seems to have confused the two problems: how to evoke faith in Moses, and how Moses was to impress the Egyptian priests and destroy their faith. The signs he is taught here relate to the latter. It is rewarding to read the dramatic account of the plagues as the record of the contest in which Yahweh vanquishes the enchanters and magicians of Egypt (8:19; 9:11). The theme is paralleled in the N.T. by Christ's defeat of the powers of darkness. As God's servant Moses is taught some of the occult knowledge, but not enough to accomplish the defeat of the Egyptians (7:11), for God is the deliverer, not Moses.

2-4, 17. In vs. 2 the rod is Moses' own cane. In vs. 17 (E) God gives it to Moses. In the latter it is also a wand with which Moses shall do the signs, whereas in the former only one sign is implied. It is not impossible that we have here the garbled account learn from farmers (Matt. 13:3, 24); builders (Matt. 7:24); tailors (Matt. 9:16); bottlers (Matt. 9:17); weather prophets (Matt. 16:3); children (Matt. 18:2); shepherds (Matt. 18:12); idle questioners (Matt. 21:24); householders (Matt. 24:43); wedding guests (Matt. 25:1). From the Communists the Christian church can learn much by seeing how a comparatively small number of people can revolutionize a state because of their intent purposefulness. The modern church has profited much from following some of the practices of the business world. The Roman Catholic Church in the past has borrowed from the antecedent paganism of its converts, so the adoration of the Blessed Virgin filled the gap left in the minds of former heathen who had always been familiar with female deities. The names of the saints took the place of the pagan gods in magic spells. Many old love songs were transformed into hymns; in fact, there was a word in medieval times used for such transformed songs, contrafacta, which means "things made over." The children of light are always learning from the children of darkness. Reading Exodus as Augustine did, his use of this episode must have been connected in his mind with ch. 25, and 35:22, which would indicate to him how the rich loot of the unbelievers became contrafacta, made over for the service and glory of the true God (see also Expos. on 13:16).

4:1-9. See Expos. on 2:23b-4:17.

And he put forth his hand, and caught it, and it became a rod in his hand:

5 That they may believe that the LORD God of their fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, hath appeared unto thee.

6 ¶ And the LORD said furthermore unto him, Put now thine hand into thy bosom. And he put his hand into his bosom: and when he took it out, behold, his hand was leprous as snow.

7 And he said, Put thine hand into thy bosom again. And he put his hand into his bosom again; and plucked it out of his bosom, and, behold, it was turned again as his other flesh.

8 And it shall come to pass, if they will not believe thee, neither hearken to the voice of the first sign, that they will believe the voice of the latter sign.

9 And it shall come to pass, if they will not believe also these two signs, neither hearken unto thy voice, that thou shalt take of the water of the river, and pour it upon the dry land: and the water which thou takest out of the river shall become blood upon the dry land.

10 ¶ And Moses said unto the LORD, O my Lord, I am not eloquent, neither heretofore, nor since thou hast spoken unto and take it by the tail" — so he put out his hand and caught it, and it became a rod in his hand — 5 "that they may believe that the LORD, the God of their fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, has appeared to you." 6 Again, the LORD said to him, "Put your hand into your bosom." And he put his hand into his bosom; and when he took it out, behold, his hand was leprous, as white as snow. 7 Then God said, "Put your hand back into your bosom." So he put his hand back into his bosom; and when he took it out, behold, it was restored like the rest of his flesh. 8 "If they will not believe you," God said, "or heed the first sign, they may believe the latter sign. 9 If they will not believe even these two signs or heed your voice, you shall take some water from the Nile and pour it upon the dry ground; and the water which you shall take from the Nile will become blood upon the dry ground."

10 But Moses said to the LORD, "Oh, my Lord, I am not eloquent, either heretofore of an Egyptian snake charmer's trick. By mesmerism he makes straight and rigid like a staff the body of a serpent; then he breaks the spell by grasping its tail. Serpent magic was common in Egypt and was associated with the gift of healing (Num. 21:9).

6-8. It is not reported that Moses practiced the second sign in Egypt.

9. Moses is taught the manner of the third sign, but does not attempt it. The first of the ten plagues, in which water is turned into blood, was not accomplished in this fashion. The form and content of these individual stories is foreign to us, but their point is perennially relevant: the God of biblical faith is master in the world he himself has made. The God who controls even the demons is not one who can or will be cajoled by men; rather he puts man under responsibility and calls him to commitment.

d) AARON AS SPOKESMAN (4:10-16)

10-13. Moses again (see vs. 2; 3:11) complains that he cannot be a hero, not comprehending that God has called him to be a servant. "Please [bf]," he says, "I am not eloquent;

10-12. Man's Weakness and God's Power.— More than fifty years ago a student was lying very ill and weak in a back room in Edinburgh. Suddenly he dimly saw standing at the foot of his bed a tall, white-haired man, who closed his eyes and said, "O Lord, Thou givest the victory unto the weak! We give it to the strong and to the talented, but Thou givest it unto the weak. Amen." These words of Alexander Whyte of Free St. George's Church have remained living in the life of that man ever since. In them was the seed idea God was trying to plant in the mind of Moses. The best work is done by people who do not think they are fitted for it. The man with all the advantages and gifts and assurance misfires; somehow he is too glib a thy servant; but I am slow of speech, and of a slow tongue.

11 And the LORD said unto him, Who hath made man's mouth? or who maketh the dumb, or deaf, or the seeing, or the blind? have not I the LORD?

12 Now therefore go, and I will be with thy mouth, and teach thee what thou shalt say.

13 And he said, O my Lord, send, I pray thee, by the hand of him whom thou wilt send.

14 And the anger of the LORD was kindled against Moses, and he said, Is not Aaron the Levite thy brother? I know that he can speak well. And also, behold, he cometh forth to meet thee: and when he seeth thee, he will be glad in his heart.

15 And thou shalt speak unto him, and put words in his mouth: and I will be with thy mouth, and with his mouth, and will teach you what ye shall do.

or since thou hast spoken to thy servant; but I am slow of speech and of tongue."

11 Then the LORD said to him, "Who has made man's mouth? Who makes him dumb, or deaf, or seeing, or blind? Is it not I, the LORD? 12 Now therefore go, and I will be with your mouth and teach you what you shall speak." 13 But he said, "Oh, my Lord, send, I pray, some other person." 14 Then the anger of the LORD was kindled against Moses and he said, "Is there not Aaron, your brother, the Levite? I know that he can speak well; and behold, he is coming out to meet you, and when he sees you he will be glad in his heart. 15 And you shall speak to him and put the words in his mouth; and I will be with your mouth and with his mouth, and will teach you what I cannot be a leader." Jeremiah made a similar protest (Jer. 1:6). The man of God must recognize his own poverty but must further learn to live in God's riches. Moses points out that his natural endowments were not greater by virtue of revelation. After God made himself known to him, his speech was the same as before. God replies that he knows what he is about; he himself is the creator of the men who are to serve him in his redeeming work. God's assurance, I will be with your mouth, does not mean that in crises Moses will suddenly become fluent. Rather since Moses' God will be the master in these crises, Moses' stammering as God's faithful servant will be adequate enough. God is equal to his own purposes and he knows how to make his creatures serve his ends. The adequacy of resources that seem futile in themselves draws attention to the power and centrality of God. This theme of the sufficiency of the weak for God is constantly played upon in the Bible (cf. I Cor. 1:27). In this instance, perhaps in order to serve the narrator's purpose of bringing Aaron onto the stage, Moses remains faithless.

14-16. Moses' unbelief arouses divine anger; he is then told of another human resource, Aaron, your brother, the Levite. The motive of the narrator (probably E or an editor of JE) is to establish the priesthood of Israel as a divinely ordained and authoritative institution in Israel's covenanted relationship with God. The passage seems to reflect strained relations between priest and prophet in the writer's own day. The narrator is irenic. He assumes the priority of the prophet in age and station. The priest is coming out to meet the prophet, Moses, who is already commissioned; and for his sake Aaron must speaker, too easy socially, too efficient, too robust, too sure of himself (see 32:21-24). Every great thing was done in spite of something. Excuses are the unconscious humor of the unwilling. God would probably never have made Moses facile with words, but would have seen to it that his stammering voice rang with a sincerity and power which is more than eloquence. The best teachers and persuaders are a priori the most unexpected persons. It may be true, especially in politics, that God is not urging you to run for office at all; but when he really is, when your better self says, "You ought"—then dare to try, and you will find that the humble man with the help of God can always do better than he thought (II Cor. 12:9; I Cor. 1:27; Ps. 118:22), almost as well as God hoped (Gen. 18:14; Matt. 19:26).

15. Through Thy Mouth Will I, the Lord, Speak.—The good sermon is always better than the preacher had written, better than all his meditation. Something happens in the pulpit 16 And he shall be thy spokesman unto the people: and he shall be, even he shall be to thee instead of a mouth, and thou shalt be to him instead of God.

17 And thou shalt take this rod in thine hand, wherewith thou shalt do signs.

18 ¶ And Moses went and returned to Jethro his father-in-law, and said unto him, Let me go, I pray thee, and return unto my brethren which are in Egypt, and see whether they be yet alive. And Jethro said to Moses, Go in peace.

19 And the LORD said unto Moses in Midian, Go, return into Egypt: for all the men are dead which sought thy life.

you shall do. 16 He shall speak for you to the people; and he shall be a mouth for you, and you shall be to him as God. 17 And you shall take in your hand this rod, with which you shall do the signs."

18 Moses went back to Jethro his father-in-law and said to him, "Let me go back, I pray, to my kinsmen in Egypt and see whether they are still alive." And Jethro said to Moses, "Go in peace." 19 And the LORD said to Moses in Mid'ian, "Go back to Egypt; for all the men who were seeking depend on the work of the prophet. But the priest rejoices in this arrangement; therefore, when he sees you he will be glad in his heart. On the other hand, the prophet needs the priest to implement, institutionally, the will of God revealed to him; therefore he can speak well—the LXX adds "for thee." The older writers are essentially prophetic in spirit. Aaron calls Moses "my lord" (32:22; Num. 12:11). Priestly rebellion against the prophet is condemned (Num. 12:1 ff.). And Aaron makes the golden calf (ch. 32). Yet they recognize both prophet and priest as the legitimate and active instruments of God in the ministry of the covenant.

The P writers exalt Aaron. Aaron, the priest, is older (6:20) than Moses, and Aaron wields the sacred rod that accomplishes the wonders (7:9-10, 19-20; 8:5-6, 16-17). Aaron is to give the word of the prophet, Moses, to Pharaoh (7:2). In P the prophet does retain the primacy over the priest in the sense that the latter would never act except on the basis of the prophet's word. But the prophet is shorn of an active role. He is in the background. He is the sanction for the program of the priest. This corresponds precisely to the role assigned to the prophets in the postexilic era when the written records of earlier prophets were accepted as normative but the outbreak of contemporary prophecy was discouraged.

17. See Exeg. on vs. 2-4, 17, pp. 877-78.

3. MOSES RETURNS TO EGYPT (4:18-31)

a) DEPARTURE FROM MIDIAN (4:18-23)

18, 20. Moses asks his father-in-law for permission to leave. The Hebrew text here reads "Jether" for Jethro. The assumption is that Moses had accepted God's commission; he did not, however, disclose the revelation to Jethro, a fact which seems to militate against a popular view that Moses was a convert of Jethro. The will of God, before its execution, is declared only to the prophet. According to this writer, Moses took his wife and his sons. Only one son (2:22) has been reported thus far. That Zipporah accompanied Moses is also assumed in vs. 25. On the other hand, 18:5 implies that Moses left his wife which goes beyond all that he had prepared to say. The eloquence of the congregation blends subtly with the thinking of the leader to produce an occasion,

And the emulous heaven yearned down, made effort to reach the earth,
As the earth had done her best, in my passion, to scale the sky.*

* Browning, "Abt Vogler."

All suddenly realize that God is speaking, saying things deeper and more wonderful than either pulpit or pew had conceived. "This kind goeth not out but by prayer and fasting," but when it does happen, when the veil that hides God's glory from mortal eyes begins to tremble and grow thin, then listen to the people sing the closing hymn as though God's presence had indeed broken through into lives that could never be the same again.

20 And Moses took his wife and his sons, and set them upon an ass, and he returned to the land of Egypt: and Moses took the rod of God in his hand.

21 And the LORD said unto Moses, When thou goest to return into Egypt, see that thou do all those wonders before Pharaoh, which I have put in thine hand: but I will harden his heart, that he shall not let the people go.

22 And thou shalt say unto Pharaoh, Thus saith the LORD, Israel is my son, even my firstborn:

23 And I say unto thee, Let my son go, that he may serve me: and if thou refuse to let him go, behold, I will slay thy son, even thy firstborn.

your life are dead." 20 So Moses took his wife and his sons and set them on an ass, and went back to the land of Egypt; and in his hand Moses took the rod of God.

21 And the LORD said to Moses, "When you go back to Egypt, see that you do before Pharaoh all the miracles which I have put in your power; but I will harden his heart, so that he will not let the people go. 22 And you shall say to Pharaoh, Thus says the LORD, 'Israel is my first-born son, 23 and I say to you, "Let my son go that he may serve me"; if you refuse to let him go, behold, I will slay your first-born son.'" and two sons behind; 18:2-4 seems to represent an effort to reconcile the discrepancy. There we are told that upon his arrival in Egypt "Moses had sent her away": i.e., back to Jethro. The passage also takes pains to introduce Eliezer, the second son. Consequently, it is not impossible that we should here read sons in the singular. Moses carries the cane or rod which is the sign of his endowment with God's power and commission.

21. The author assumes that the Lord gave Moses a preview of the course of the conflict between God and the Pharaoh. It is a part of God's purpose that the Egyptians will reject Moses' plan. The testimony of Moses will be the means of bringing the wickedness and pretension of the Pharaoh to maturity (cf. Isa. 6:10). God's design in deepening the ruler's stubbornness, which necessitates a multiplication of wonders, is frequently defined to show that (a) the Egyptians may know Yahweh is God (7:5, 17; 8:10; 9:14, 30); (b) Israel may know him as a great God (10:2); (c) Yahweh is Israel's God (11:7); and (d) Yahweh is free in the midst of all magic (7:11, 22; 8:7, 18; 22:18). The central moment in the exodus revelation is that of God's freedom and power. He makes even the wrath of man to praise him (cf. Ps. 76:10). The problem of divine and human freedom is implicit here. The interpretation of man's stubbornness as a part of God's design is not to deny man freedom and responsibility but to attest that the result of wickedness can be used by God for his own ends, a view which leads to the prophetic doctrine of the divine judgment (cf. I Thess. 5:9).

23. The anticipation of the death of the first-born is here limited to the first-born of the Pharaoh (cf. 11:5; 12:29-34). This is due punishment for his enslavement of 20b. See Expos. on 2:23b-4:17, 20b.

21-23. Man's Will and God's Mastery.—The whole narrative is arranged from its different sources so as to dramatize the great battle of wits between Moses and Pharaoh. It is especially made clear that all the details of the struggle were in the hands of a higher power. Nothing in the world occurs apart from the will of God (Ps. 76:10). Things all arrange themselves so that God can display his full power, even to the point noted in Isa. 6:10. So we find the ancient problem of divine grace and human freedom in the unsolved condition in which it has always remained. The biblical authors emphasize first one side and then the other, but make no attempt to reconcile them. Calvin felt that unless God had a blueprint of every detail exactly as it was going to happen there could be no meaning in history—all would be the prey of chance. If God did not harden Pharaoh's heart, how then did it happen? The only answer seems to be that it happened contrary to the will of God. In that case, God has lost control of things and chance rules. On the other hand, Pharaoh knew that he was free to do as he wanted, and the guilt of his sin was his alone. Like two poles of an arc light, these two opposites stand across from one another, and the light of common sense shines between.

24 ¶ And it came to pass by the way in the inn, that the LORD met him, and sought to kill him.

25 Then Zipporah took a sharp stone, and cut off the foreskin of her son, and cast it at his feet, and said, Surely a bloody husband art thou to me.

26 So he let him go: then she said, A bloody husband thou art, because of the circumcision.

24 At a lodging place on the way the LORD met him and sought to kill him. 25 Then Zippo'rah took a flint and cut off her son's foreskin, and touched Moses' feet with it, and said, "Surely you are a bridegroom of blood to me!" 26 So he let him alone. Then it was that she said, "You are a bridegroom of blood," because of the circumcision.

Israel for, says the LORD, Israel is my first-born son (cf. Hos. 11:1). This statement refers to Israel's election by God; Israel is not only God's first-born, but his only son. Both Hos. 11:1 and the metaphor of Israel as the bride imply this (Jer. 2:1-3; Ezek. 16:1-15; Hos. 2:2-13). The corollary of Israel's sonship is God's fatherhood (Isa. 63:16; 64:8). This elective relationship of father and son in redemption the Bible distinguishes sharply from the fatherhood of God and the sonship (and brotherhood) of man in creation. In the account of the plagues this phrase Let my son go becomes the theme of Moses' demand upon the Pharaoh; the term son, however, is there changed to "people."

b) CIRCUMCISION OF MOSES (4:24-26)

24-26. As it stands this is an etiological story which gives a different account of the origin of circumcision in Israel from that in Gen. 17 (P). A flint knife is used, indicating the ancient practice of the rite (Josh. 5:2). Jewish tradition says it is the younger son of Moses who is circumcised; at any rate infant circumcision is indicated, though in the beginning it was performed at puberty or at the time of marriage. There are, however, difficulties connected with the story in its present form: the demonic element implied by Yahweh's attempt to slay Moses; the incongruity of addressing Moses, father of two children, as a bridegroom; and the fact that Zipporah herself performs the rite. Beer, following Gressmann, offers an interpretation which seems best to account for these problems (Exodus, pp. 37-39). Zipporah the Midianite performed the circumcision to indicate that the practice came to Israel from the Midianites. In an earlier version of the story she circumcised Moses, not his son; and the occasion was their bridal night. Her object was to save Moses' life from destruction by a demon who denied Moses the possession of his bride. Zipporah touches the demon with the foreskin and addresses to him the words, Surely you are a bridegroom of blood to me! Thus the demon is appeased. The second use of the phrase is perhaps to be understood as addressed to Moses and seems to hint at the ancient practice of adult circumcision. In Tobit we have such a demonic tale (Tob. 6:13-8:17). It is also probable that a similar demonic attack is implied in the statement in Gen. 38:7; by a quick-witted presence of mind Zipporah here avoids what happened there. To those who reworked the story into its present form its original demonic character had been lost; thus the name Yahweh has replaced that of the demon.

Man is free within certain limits. God lets him act as he wishes within them, but is able to control the results to his own glory. He hardens Pharaoh's heart in the sense that the laws which determine the progressive degeneration of a self-willed personality, and make it the prisoner of its evil past, are laws of God.

24-26. A Bridegroom of Blood.—This incident, which seems to have no relation to its context in the narrative, may be an early legend concerning the fateful dangers and importance of the bridal night (see Exeg.). It appears to refer to the ancient idea that a demon asserted the jus primae noctis and that adult circumcision was in part for the purpose of appeasing the spirit and saving the life of the bridegroom. Probably included from a mass of similar discarded material because it seemed to the editor to give the origin of the rite of circumcision, it is of value to us in that it emphasizes the jungle

27 ¶ And the LORD said to Aaron, Go into the wilderness to meet Moses. And he went, and met him in the mount of God, and kissed him.

28 And Moses told Aaron all the words of the LORD who had sent him, and all the signs which he had commanded him.

29 ¶ And Moses and Aaron went and gathered together all the elders of the children of Israel:

30 And Aaron spake all the words which the LORD had spoken unto Moses, and did the signs in the sight of the people.

31 And the people believed: and when they heard that the LORD had visited the children of Israel, and that he had looked upon their affliction, then they bowed their heads and worshipped.

5 And afterward Moses and Aaron went in, and told Pharaoh, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, Let my people go, that they may hold a feast unto me in the wilderness.

27 The LORD said to Aaron, "Go into the wilderness to meet Moses." So he went, and met him at the mountain of God and kissed him. 28 And Moses told Aaron all the words of the LORD with which he had sent him, and all the signs which he had charged him to do. 29 Then Moses and Aaron went and gathered together all the elders of the people of Israel. 30 And Aaron spoke all the words which the LORD had spoken to Moses, and did the signs in the sight of the people. 31 And the people believed; and when they heard that the LORD had visited the people of Israel and that he had seen their affliction, they bowed their heads and worshiped.

5 Afterward Moses and Aaron went to Pharaoh and said, "Thus says the LORD, the God of Israel, 'Let my people go, that they may hold a feast to me in the wil-

c) AARON MEETS MOSES (4:27-31)

27. The statement that Aaron met Moses at the mountain of God comes from a hand other than that which has given us the account of his journey to Egypt.

28. Moses communicates to Aaron all the words of the LORD, i.e., God's plan of redemption previously kept secret from Jethro (vs. 18).

29, 31. The name Aaron is perhaps a gloss here. The verb is in the singular. The people accept the call and commission of Moses as authentic and give thanks for the prospect of deliverance. The passage serves as a transition to a new phase of the drama.

4. MOSES CONFRONTS THE FACTS (5:1-6:1)

This chapter alludes to the difficulties and forces which operate in the process of the deliverance that is to come. In the rejection of Moses' request and in the retaliatory measures that follow we have a taste of the Pharaoh's idolatry and despotism. The failure of the appeal by the foremen arouses their resentment against Moses. To obtain deliverance even slaves must suffer "the loss of all things" (Phil. 3:8). The slaves have not yet grasped this mystery; Moses has not grasped it either, but with pity for his people and faith in God he seeks the answer.

a) THE PHARAOH SCORNS YAHWEH (5:1-5)

5:1, 3. E and J here respectively report on the first visit to the Pharaoh. E stresses the demand God asked Moses to make (4:23), reports that Moses and Aaron were of primitive superstitions out of which the religion of Yahweh was developed.

27-31. See Expos. on 2:23b-4:17, 20b, 27-31.

5:1-2. Who Is Yahweh?—Pharaoh has never heard of the god Yahweh; he does not seem to doubt that there is such a god, but the condition of the god's followers does not, in his opinion as a polytheist, seem to indicate that he is a very important god. The modern analogy is the conflict between Locke's idea as imbedded in the American Constitution, that the sole justification for the existence of any government is the protection of private property, and the humanitarian doctrine that human welfare is more important than property rights. The domestic and foreign policy of the United States

2 And Pharaoh said, Who is the LORD, that I should obey his voice to let Israel go? I know not the LORD, neither will I let Israel go.

3 And they said, The God of the Hebrews hath met with us: let us go, we pray thee, three days' journey into the desert, and sacrifice unto the LORD our God; lest he fall upon us with pestilence, or with the sword.

derness.'" 2 But Pharaoh said, "Who is the LORD, that I should heed his voice and let Israel go? I do not know the LORD, and moreover I will not let Israel go." 3 Then they said, "The God of the Hebrews has met with us; let us go, we pray, a three days' journey into the wilderness, and sacrifice to the LORD our God, lest he fall upon us spokesmen, and that they sought a permit to feast in the wilderness. J stresses the revelation of God as such, says that the elders (they) were spokesmen (3:18), and that the request was for permission to sacrifice. The oldest type of sacrifice in Israel consisted essentially in a common festal meal "before the LORD" (1 Sam. 1:1-21; 9:11-24). The request to return to their ancestral haunts for a solemn occasion was perfectly natural and reflects a universal tendency. "Man is most conservative where he reverences most." But implicit in the request is the desire to exchange the service of Pharaoh for that of Yahweh.

2. Presumably Pharaoh knows all gods that matter (H. and H. A. Frankfort, John A. Wilson, Thorkild Jacobsen, and William A. Irwin, The Intellectual Adventure of Ancient Man [Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1946], p. 81). But of the Hebrew God he says, Who is the LORD? It is preposterous that he should surrender Israel to a deity he does not even know. The irony of the drama that follows is that this is the very God who progressively strips Pharaoh of everything.

is the story of the struggle between the worship of these two gods. We are still undecided as to whether, in considering American oil rights in a foreign country, the matter should be decided on the basis of the rights of property or of the welfare of the people of that country. As in Egypt, the property owners seem to be so much more respectable and solid and cultured than the workers in the oil fields, mines, and factories, that, like Pharaoh, the courts still are inclined to ask, "Who is this new god, Human Welfare?"

Even the most elementary attempt upon the part of the Mexican Government to establish economic justice within its own country by regaining some of its natural resources would appear to the United States and Great Britain, as it did to Woodrow Wilson in 1916, as a breach not merely of traditional international law but also of the elementary principles of political morality.¹

Pharaoh saw only property rights in the labor of slaves; Moses saw the right of his people to freedom and happiness. The authors of Exodus were in sympathy with Moses yet, as the book shows, were willing to enslave other peoples to their own profit. Among the Hebrews the master's right of property in his slaves of foreign origin was unlimited.

¹ F. S. C. Northrop, The Meeting of East and West (New York: The Macmillan Co., 1946), p. 43.

3. The Dread of the Divine.—It is a common belief among ancient peoples that gods avenge themselves upon their followers for omitting their required rites by sending pestilence or war upon them. The pestilence may be the clue to the story of the death of the first-born of the Egyptians; perhaps originally it was supposed to start among the unsanitary quarters of the slums which housed the Hebrew slaves. Carlyle's incident is apposite:

A poor Irish Widow, her husband having died in one of the Lanes of Edinburgh, went forth with her three children, bare of all resource, to solicit help from the Charitable Establishments of that City. At this Charitable Establishment and then at that she was refused; referred from one to the other, helped by none; . . . till her strength and heart failed her: she sank down in typhus fever; died, and infected her Lane with fever, so that "seventeen other persons" died of fever there in consequence. . . . Very curious. The forlorn Irish Widow applies to her fellow-creatures, as if saying, "Behold I am sinking, bare of help: ye must help me! I am your sister, bone of your bone; one God made us: ye must help me!" They answer, "No; impossible; thou art no sister of ours." But she proves her sisterhood; her typhus fever kills them: they actually were her brothers, though denying it! Had human creature ever to go lower for a proof?"

² Past and Present, Bk. III, ch. ii.

4 And the king of Egypt said unto them, Wherefore do ye, Moses and Aaron, let the people from their works? get you unto your burdens.

5 And Pharaoh said, Behold, the people of the land now are many, and ye make them rest from their burdens.

6 And Pharaoh commanded the same day the taskmasters of the people, and their officers, saying,

7 Ye shall no more give the people straw to make brick, as heretofore: let them go and gather straw for themselves.

8 And the tale of the bricks, which they did make heretofore, ye shall lay upon them; ye shall not diminish ought thereof: for they be idle; therefore they cry, saying, Let us go and sacrifice to our God.

9 Let there more work be laid upon the men, that they may labor therein; and let them not regard vain words.

with pestilence or with the sword." 4 But the king of Egypt said to them, "Moses and Aaron, why do you take the people away from their work? Get to your burdens."

5 And Pharaoh said, "Behold, the people of the land are now many and you make them rest from their burdens!" 6 The same day Pharaoh commanded the taskmasters of the people and their foremen, 7 "You shall no longer give the people straw to make bricks, as heretofore; let them go and gather straw for themselves. 8 But the number of bricks which they made heretofore you shall lay upon them, you shall by no means lessen it; for they are idle; therefore they cry, 'Let us go and offer sacrifice to our God.' 9 Let heavier work be laid upon the men that they may labor at it and pay no regard to lying words."

4. Pharaoh has disposed of Yahweh; now, as despot, he turns to Yahweh's spokesmen. He assumes they are slaves who have left their work and tells them, Get to your burdens. In Egypt under the Ramessides it was normal practice for slaves with complaints to appeal directly to the court, by-passing the intricate system of corvée superintendents. The records show that occasionally, under threat of strikes, the complaints were met in part. But here the king is adamant. He treats Israel's spokesmen as agitators without a cause or a following. He implies that Moses and Aaron were charged with causing the people to refrain from work.

5. In J's account Pharaoh's response is similar. The people of the land are the Hebrews (cf. 1:7). Instead of are now many, Meek (Amer. Trans.) has "are lazy as it is." This reading demands a slight textual emendation but seems more to the point, especially in view of vss. 8, 17.

b) PHARAOH RETALIATES (5:6-14)

6-9. This is a specific instance of a general policy (1:8-14). Pharaoh will stop the agitation by breaking the spirit of the slaves. If they are utterly exhausted they will pay no regard to lying words. He orders the taskmasters and foremen to stop the provision of straw (tebhen) needed in making bricks.

4-5. Those Common People!—If the RSV reading is accepted (but see the Exeg.), the meaning apparently is that "there are already more of them than of the native population," which sounds as if it had been overheard today in the lounge of some exclusive men's or women's club. It is an age-long problem that "the right people" do not have the largest families. Boston of the later nineteenth century, shocked at the growth of the Irish immigrants; Germans of the 1930's, horrified at the brains and prosperity of the Jews in their midst; the South, alarmed at the number of Negro children—they all used the same words Pharaoh used.

They all longed for Pharaoh's power to deal with the situation with a high hand.

6-9. Let Them Get to Work.—Pharaoh's first remedy for the situation was to give the Hebrews longer hours and harder labor (see Exeg. on the gathering of stubble). One of the modern arguments against an eight-hour day was that if the workers had more leisure they would have time to think up dangerous thoughts. Give them more work to do, and at the end of the day they will be too tired to think of organizing and making trouble: this is the logic of the Pharaohs of all times. In the mills of Lowell, Massachusetts, in 1845, the average length of the working 10 ¶ And the taskmasters of the people went out, and their officers, and they spake to the people, saying, Thus saith Pharaoh, I will not give you straw.

11 Go ye, get you straw where ye can find it: yet not aught of your work shall be diminished.

12 So the people were scattered abroad throughout all the land of Egypt to gather stubble instead of straw.

13 And the taskmasters hasted them, saying, Fulfil your works, your daily tasks, as when there was straw.

14 And the officers of the children of Israel, which Pharaoh's taskmasters had set over them, were beaten, and demanded, Wherefore have ye not fulfilled your task in making brick both yesterday and to-day, as heretofore?

15 ¶ Then the officers of the children of Israel came and cried unto Pharaoh, saying, Wherefore dealest thou thus with thy servants?

16 There is no straw given unto thy servants, and they say to us, Make brick: and, behold, thy servants are beaten; but the fault is in thine own people.

10 So the taskmasters and the foremen of the people went out and said to the people, "Thus says Pharaoh, 'I will not give you straw. 11 Go yourselves, get your straw wherever you can find it; but your work will not be lessened in the least.'" 12 So the people were scattered abroad throughout all the land of Egypt, to gather stubble for straw. 13 The taskmasters were urgent, saying, "Complete your work, your daily task, as when there was straw." 14 And the foremen of the people of Israel, whom Pharaoh's taskmasters had set over them, were beaten, and were asked, "Why have you not done all your task of making bricks to-day, as hitherto?"

15 Then the foremen of the people of Israel came and cried to Pharaoh, "Why do you deal thus with your servants? 16 No straw is given to your servants, yet they say to us, 'Make bricks!' And behold, your servants are beaten; but the fault is in your

10-14. The officers implement the order. The slaves had to go into the fields to gather stubble (qash) for straw (tebhen). Tebhen consisted of that portion of the cut grain which remained after threshing; qash in this case seems to refer to the uncut stubble left on the root in the field. Qash was sometimes used for fuel. To make it serve the purpose of tebhen in brickmaking the slaves not only had to cut it in the fields but perhaps crush it as well, for qash was much coarser than tebhen. Nevertheless, the same tally of bricks was demanded. When it was not forthcoming the Egyptian taskmasters beat the Hebrew foremen. These foremen anticipate the trying role of the Jewish representatives or taxgatherers who in later ages were responsible to all sorts of hostile and nefarious foreign rulers.

c) THE FOREMEN APPEAL TO PHARAOH (5:15-21)

15-16. The slaves and their foremen assumed that even slaves have certain rights. Thinking that the impossible order was the word of some capricious underling, and trusting in responsible communication, they appeal to the king. They report the beating and point to the unreasonableness of the demand that led to it.

day varied from eleven hours and twenty-four minutes in January and December to thirteen hours and thirty-one minutes in April; when "agitators" protested, the committee appointed by the state government reported that they were "fully satisfied" that things "could not be improved by any suggestion of theirs, or by any act of the legislature." The New York Journal of Commerce added that "to work only ten hours in summer and eight in winter is to waste life." *

5:10-6:1. When Trust in God Seems Disappointed.—Moses has no answer for the enraged foremen of the Hebrew slaves. What must have

* Arthur M. Schlesinger, Jr., The Age of Jackson (Boston: Little, Brown & Co., 1945), pp. 271 ff. gives the story of the struggle at that time in American life between the god of property and the Son of man.

17 But he said, Ye are idle, ye are idle: therefore ye say, Let us go and do sacrifice to the LORD.

18 Go therefore now, and work; for there shall no straw be given you, yet shall ye deliver the tale of bricks.

19 And the officers of the children of Israel did see that they were in evil case, after it was said, Ye shall not minish aught from your bricks of your daily task.

20 ¶ And they met Moses and Aaron, who stood in the way, as they came forth from Pharaoh:

21 And they said unto them, The LORD look upon you, and judge; because ye have made our savor to be abhorred in the eyes of Pharaoh, and in the eyes of his servants, to put a sword in their hand to slay us.

22 And Moses returned unto the LORD, and said, Lord, wherefore hast thou so evil entreated this people? why is it that thou hast sent me?

23 For since I came to Pharaoh to speak in thy name, he hath done evil to this people; neither hast thou delivered thy people at all.

own people." 17 But he said, "You are idle, you are idle; therefore you say, 'Let us go and sacrifice to the LORD.' 18 Go now, and work; for no straw shall be given you, yet you shall deliver the same number of bricks." 19 The foremen of the people of Israel saw that they were in evil plight, when they said, "You shall by no means lessen your daily number of bricks." 20 They met Moses and Aaron, who were waiting for them, as they came forth from Pharaoh; 21 and they said to them, "The LORD look upon you and judge, because you have made us offensive in the sight of Pharaoh and his servants, and have put a sword in their hand to kill us."

22 Then Moses turned again to the LORD and said, "O LORD, why hast thou done evil to this people? Why didst thou ever send me? 23 For since I came to Pharaoh to speak in thy name, he has done evil to this people, and thou hast not delivered thy people at 17, 19. But now they learn that the Pharaoh himself is capricious. Here is the insecure despot, the idol with feet of clay, who is haunted by the neurotic fear that despite all his efforts his slaves may break loose. He cannot weigh this complaint. His mind is obsessed by the need of maintaining his security. So he yells at the foreman, You are idle, you are idle ("You are lazy" Amer. Trans.; cf. vs. 5) and repeats the order which is the cause of the complaint. The foremen see that they are in evil plight. They would have to report the failure of the appeal to their fellow slaves. What is more, the impossible order was a sign of complete helplessness. The last shred of dignity, security, and hope was gone. Life had lost its meaning.

20-21. Moses and Aaron were interested in the outcome of the appeal. They may have helped to plan it. But now, in their fear and dismay, the foremen turn on the leaders.

d) THE SURRENDER OF FAITH (5:22-6:1)

22. The foremen did not view the deprivation of their lost security as an aspect of the battle waged by God against Pharaoh on their behalf. Moses did believe this was all been his feelings when he found how hard a task it was that Yahweh had given him! The people thought that he had just made things worse by his interference. He feels his outraged prayer to Yahweh is well justified. But Yahweh is not annoyed with him. He knows how difficult it is for his servant. His answer to the prayer is Now shalt thou see what I will do. It is cold comfort for us all when this is the answer to our prayers. As the Prayer Book version of Ps. 27:14 says, we have to "tarry . . . the LORD's leisure."

When we pray, we generally want quick action, but the mills of God grind slowly. Trollope humorously says:

Those who offend us are generally punished for the offence they give; but we so frequently miss the satisfaction of knowing that we are avenged! It is arranged, apparently, that the injurer shall be punished, but that the person injured shall not gratify his desire for vengeance.⁴

⁴ The Small House at Allington, ch. 1.

6 Then the LORD said unto Moses, Now shalt thou see what I will do to Pharaoh: for with a strong hand shall he let them go, and with a strong hand shall he drive them out of his land.

2 And God spake unto Moses, and said unto him, I am the LORD:

3 And I appeared unto Abraham, unto Isaac, and unto Jacob, by the name of God Almighty; but by my name JEHOVAH was I not known to them.

6 all." 1 But the LORD said to Moses, "Now you shall see what I will do to Pharaoh; for with a strong hand he will send them out, yea, with a strong hand he will drive them out of his land."

2 And God said to Moses, "I am the LORD. 3 I appeared to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob, as God Almighty,^b but by my name the LORD I did not make myself a part of the Lord's purpose, but he could not understand it. He had still to learn that if his people were to be the possession of the Lord rather than of Pharaoh, there must be a complete end to Pharaoh as a resource for them. Moses was discovering that if his people were to be delivered by God, they could have only God as a resource. The unreasonableness of Pharaoh furthers this discovery.

^b Heb El Shaddai

6:1. Yahweh teaches Moses that this defeat of the delegation of foremen is actually the beginning of God's victory over Pharaoh and of a security for Israel in which there is no caprice.

C. THE P ACCOUNT OF THE CALL AND COMMISSION OF MOSES (6:2-7:13)

The priestly editors supplement the story of the call and commission of Moses (3:1-6:1) by means of a brief parallel account of their own. In it they include only those episodes of the larger cycle which from their viewpoint need further clarification and comment and make them conform to the convictions or serve the purposes that are their own. The P account must be compared to the preceding one to learn that, despite radical alterations in concern and emphasis, these editors lived by the same faith as the people whose work they supplemented. The account assumes that God appeared to Moses in Egypt, not at Sinai. Therefore it is inserted at the point at which Moses had already returned to Egypt and introduced himself to the people and to the Pharaoh.

1. GOD DISCLOSES HIS PLAN (6:2-9)

2-3. God said to Moses: There is no hint of a vision (cf. 3:1-6). For P, God does not "come down" as in the older stories. God tends more and more to be separated from the realm of history and human life. But on occasion men do still hear his voice.

This is but one very human instance of our frustration in not being able to get God to act just as we would like to have him do. He says, Now shalt thou see what I will do. In the end things will be made clear; now we must go on and trust him. Religion consists in trusting God after we have come to the outermost bound of our human effort. There is no use praying till we have done our utmost for the end we desire. The airplane does not start from the spot where we idly sit on our doorstep; we must, by our own effort, get out of the city of circumstance to the place where the plane starts. Then we are justified in trusting to the air of the heavens. Moses had done his best, and was discouraged by the results, but it was his best; God said that there might seem to him to be needless delay, but he had only to trust God to operate when the best time should come. As John Flavel said, "Man's extremity is God's opportunity." The proof of such a religious truth as this is not a talking theory, but a silent practice. "For sharp or acute searching alone doth it not; but to will and do well."⁵

6:2-7:7. See Expos. on 2:23b-4:17, 20b, 27-31; 6:2-7:7.

2-13. God of the Covenant.—This section is the work of the writer whom we call P. It is much later than the other accounts of the call of Moses. P is inclined to omit the elements of folklore in the stories, and tries to write world history at least as far as underlying principles go. As in the case of the ancient historians of Greece, we see in Exodus the technique of giving two or three accounts of the same episode, ⁵ Jacob Boehme, Epistles: To C. B., Sept. 12, 1620.

4 And I have also established my covenant with them, to give them the land of Canaan, the land of their pilgrimage, wherein they were strangers.

5 And I have also heard the groaning of the children of Israel, whom the Egyptians keep in bondage; and I have remembered my covenant.

6 Wherefore say unto the children of Israel, I am the LORD, and I will bring you out from under the burdens of the Egyptians, and I will rid you out of their bondage, and I will redeem you with a stretched out arm, and with great judgments:

known to them. 4 I also established my covenant with them, to give them the land of Canaan, the land in which they dwelt as sojourners. 5 Moreover I have heard the groaning of the people of Israel whom the Egyptians hold in bondage and I have remembered my covenant. 6 Say therefore to the people of Israel, 'I am the LORD, and I will bring you out from under the burdens of the Egyptians, and I will deliver you from their bondage, and I will redeem you with an outstretched arm and with great

I am the LORD: Thus God begins his revelation. As E implies (3:15), P says explicitly that the patriarchs had not known this name. Their specific name for God, he adds, was El Shaddai (RSV mg.). This name was an archaic title in P's day. Job uses it thirty-one times (5:17; etc.). Its meaning was no longer very specific; probably the word Almighty well represents what it did mean in this later era. The word seems to derive from the root shādhēdh, which signifies power expressing itself in destructive violence. This may be reflected in Joel 1:15. In Deut. 32:17 the term refers to foreign gods or demons.

4-8. The phrase my covenant is characteristic of the entire later period (Gen. 17:2, 4, 7, 10; Lev. 26:9, 15, 42, 44; Mal. 2:4-5). Sometimes it refers to the law of Sinai (Lev. 26:15), but here and elsewhere it signifies the promise made to Abraham. The late period makes this covenant much more prominent than it was in the days of the prophets, treating it as a warrant for the Exodus and the possession of Canaan. For the P writers, as if to say that the reader must decide how to harmonize the details (Herodotus does the same) and attempt to get a framework of meaning around the incidents related. Thus P seems to divide ancient history into epochs, each characterized by a special covenant and a new name for God. Each time there is a special ritual sign which seals the covenant forever. He thinks of four eras: from Adam to Noah; from Noah to Abraham; from Abraham to Moses; from Moses to the end of the world. Noah's sign is the rainbow; Abraham's is circumcision; Moses' is the sabbath. For Adam the name is God; for Abraham, El Shaddai; for Moses, Yahweh. This early attempt to begin the writing of world history can best be appreciated when P discards the old idea that different names always mean different gods, and asserts that the same God revealed himself at different times by different names; he also feels deeply the relationship between land, race, and religion.

The sign of the rainbow in the sky over the Promised Land, the sign in the flesh of the chosen people, the weekly sign of sabbath rest and worship of the true religion—these signs are constant reminders to the deity of his merciful engagements. With P, a covenant is a gra-acious act on the part of God, by which he binds himself to keep his part of a common agreement. The history of a nation is not an accidental growth, but the realization of the plans of a higher will.

The idea of a "chosen people" with a "promised land" and "special covenant" has been the source of much good and much evil in history. In the mid-twentieth century we have come to a point where the bad results of this belief seem to outweigh the good. It has proved to be one cause of the unpopularity of the Jews among the nations; it has been reduced to absurdity by Kipling's "White Man's Burden," and to unspeakable horror by the Nazi doctrine of the hierarchy of races, one a master race, the others slave peoples; even in democratic nations it appears in the tendency to act as missionaries to, rather than as brothers of, other peoples.

The good in the idea can be savored only by those who believe also that every nation has its own covenant, and is God's chosen people, and shares in a true religion; and that the differing contributions of all nations go to make up the ultimate discovery of that which is true for all.

4. Participation in the Covenant.—The master word in whose understanding alone many diffi-

7 And I will take you to me for a people, and I will be to you a God: and ye shall know that I am the LORD your God, which bringeth you out from under the burdens of the Egyptians.

8 And I will bring you in unto the land, concerning the which I did swear to give it to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob; and I will give it you for a heritage: I am the LORD.

9 ¶ And Moses spake so unto the children of Israel: but they hearkened not unto Moses for anguish of spirit, and for cruel bondage.

10 And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

11 Go in, speak unto Pharaoh king of Egypt, that he let the children of Israel go out of his land.

12 And Moses spake before the LORD, saying, Behold, the children of Israel have not hearkened unto me; how then shall Pharaoh hear me, who am of uncircumcised lips?

13 And the LORD spake unto Moses and unto Aaron, and gave them a charge unto the children of Israel, and unto Pharaoh king of Egypt, to bring the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt.

acts of judgment, 7 and I will take you for my people, and I will be your God; and you shall know that I am the LORD your God, who has brought you out from under the burdens of the Egyptians. 8 And I will bring you into the land which I swore to give to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob; I will give it to you for a possession. I am the LORD.' 9 Moses spoke thus to the people of Israel; but they did not listen to Moses, because of their broken spirit and their cruel bondage.

10 And the LORD said to Moses, 11 "Go in, tell Pharaoh king of Egypt to let the people of Israel go out of his land." 12 But Moses said to the LORD, "Behold, the people of Israel have not listened to me; how then shall Pharaoh listen to me, who am a man of uncircumcised lips?" 13 But the LORD spoke to Moses and Aaron, and gave them a charge to the people of Israel and to Pharaoh king of Egypt to bring the people of Israel out of the land of Egypt.

people, country, and faith are bound up together. God had "lifted up his hand" as a sign of an oath that Israel would possess Canaan.

9. In contrast to the earlier accounts (3:18; 4:31) the people did not listen to Moses when he came to them. P uses this as a device to introduce the leader's doubts and fears.

2. THE INADEQUACY OF MOSES (6:10-13, 28-30)

10-13, 28-30. The purpose of this jumbled section is to prepare the way for the selection of Aaron as the partner of Moses (7:1-7). Vss. 10-12 are substantially repeated in vss. 28-30. Moses, not having been welcomed by the slaves (vs. 9), tells God that he lacks the necessary fluency for the assignment. In the earlier account of this objection (4:10-16) God spoke of the adequacy for his purposes of men whom he himself has created. The theocentric emphasis of JE does not interest P, who prefers to stress the indispensability of Aaron. In vs. 13 this appointment is already assumed. That verse is really a summary of 7:1-7. In an earlier form of the text it probably preceded immediately 7:1. After the insertion of the new genealogy, vss. 28-30 were added to remind the reader of what had gone before. Unfortunately vs. 13, preceding the genealogy, had actually carried the story farther than the addition does.

cult antinomies find their solution is the word "participation." Authority and freedom, revelation and reason, God and man—all are through this conception understood and reconciled. Authority is rational in which both sides, the ruler and the ruled, participate. Revelation is a priceless gift when it becomes real by the participation of reason, as commentary, interpreter, and infusing spirit, rather than as an antagonistic substitute. In the Incarnation God participates in man, man in God, precluding the oppressive idea of a totalitarian deity. The spir-

14 ¶ These be the heads of their fathers' houses: The sons of Reuben the firstborn of Israel; Hanoch, and Pallu, Hezron, and Carmi: these be the families of Reuben.

15 And the sons of Simeon; Jemuel, and Jamin, and Ohad, and Jachin, and Zohar, and Shaul the son of a Canaanitish woman: these are the families of Simeon.

16 ¶ And these are the names of the sons of Levi according to their generations; Gershon, and Kohath, and Merari: and the years of the life of Levi were a hundred thirty and seven years.

17 The sons of Gershon; Libni, and Shimi, according to their families.

18 And the sons of Kohath; Amram, and Izhar, and Hebron, and Uzziel: and the years of the life of Kohath were a hundred thirty and three years.

19 And the sons of Merari; Mahali and Mushi: these are the families of Levi according to their generations.

20 And Amram took him Jochebed his father's sister to wife; and she bare him Aaron and Moses: and the years of the life of Amram were a hundred and thirty and seven years.

21 ¶ And the sons of Izhar; Korah, and Nepheg, and Zichri.

14 These are the heads of their fathers' houses: the sons of Reuben, the first-born of Israel: Hanoch, Pallu, Hezron and Carmi; these are the families of Reuben. 15 The sons of Simeon: Jemu'el, Jamin, Ohad, Jachin, Zohar, and Shaul, the son of a Canaanite woman; these are the families of Simeon. 16 These are the names of the sons of Levi according to their generations: Gershon, Kohath, and Merar'i, the years of the life of Levi being a hundred and thirty-seven years. 17 The sons of Gershon: Libni and Shimei, by their families. 18 The sons of Kohath: Amram, Izhar, Hebron and Uzzi'el, the years of the life of Kohath being a hundred and thirty-three years. 19 The sons of Merar'i: Mahli and Mushi. These are the families of the Levites according to their generations. 20 Amram took to wife Joch'ebed his father's sister and she bore him Aaron and Moses, the years of the life of Amram being one hundred and thirty-seven years. 21 The sons of Izhar: Korah,

3. THE GENEALOGY OF AARON AND MOSES (6:14-27)

14-16. The genealogy begins with the three oldest sons of Jacob: Reuben, Simeon, and Levi. It lists the names of the sons of each. Thus far it duplicates the genealogy of all the sons of Israel in Gen. 46:9-27.

17-27. But its real concern is with the priestly tribe of Levi. Of the three sons of Levi, Kohath is the bearer of the line. Two of Kohath's sons are considered significant: Izhar, who becomes the father of Korah; and Amram, who becomes the father of Aaron and Moses. Through Aaron the line carries to Eleazar, and through him to Phinehas. In Num. 3 the same pattern is elaborated to show the role of various branches of the family itual religion of the O.T. is an eternal covenant between God and man (see the words of Runeberg quoted in Expos on 3:14).

14-27. Priestly Pedigrees.—These lists of clans or families have been compiled from various sources with omissions and additions (see Num. 3:17-20; 26:59). Any attempt to harmonize the lists and ages with other information in the Bible is beset with many difficulties (see Ruth 4:18-20; I Chr. 2:4-10; etc.). The ages given for Moses, Aaron, and others have probably symbolic meaning rather than literal truth. Some have seen a connection with the forty years' wandering in the wilderness. It should be noted that his priestly friends have made Aaron this time the first-born (7:7), contradicting 2:1-2. At the same time, no reference is made to the family of Moses, while full information is given about the wives and children of Aaron and Eleazar. Every royal or priestly hereditary line has to see to it that history backs up its claims to a clear pedigree. It is best to make no mention of rival families (see Exeg.).

The ages given for the various characters in the O.T. have resulted in much curious speculation, and much sacred mathematics for the purpose of proving the theories of inspiration fashionable in the day. The Great Historical, Geographical, Genealogical and Poetical Dictionary, published in London in 1694, seeks to 22 And the sons of Uzziel; Mishael, and Elzaphan, and Zithri.

23 And Aaron took him Elisheba, daughter of Amminadab, sister of Naashon, to wife; and she bare him Nadab and Abihu, Eleazar and Ithamar.

24 And the sons of Korah; Assir, and Elkanah, and Abiasaph: these are the families of the Korhites.

25 And Eleazar Aaron's son took him one of the daughters of Putiel to wife; and she bare him Phinehas: these are the heads of the fathers of the Levites according to their families.

26 These are that Aaron and Moses, to whom the LORD said, Bring out the children of Israel from the land of Egypt according to their armies.

27 These are they which spake to Pharaoh king of Egypt, to bring out the children of Israel from Egypt: these are that Moses and Aaron.

28 ¶ And it came to pass on the day when the LORD spake unto Moses in the land of Egypt, Nepheg, and Zichri. 22 And the sons of Uzzi'el: Mi'sha-el, Elza'phan, and Sithri.

23 Aaron took to wife Eli'sheba, the daughter of Ammin'adab and the sister of Nahshon; and she bore him Nadab, Abi'hu, Elea'zar and Ith'amar. 24 The sons of Korah: Assir, Elka'nah, and Abi'asaph; these are the families of the Korahites. 25 Elea'zar, Aaron's son, took to wife one of the daughters of Pu'ti-el; and she bore him Phin'ehas. These are the heads of the fathers' houses of the Levites by their families.

26 These are the Aaron and Moses to whom the LORD said: "Bring out the people of Israel from the land of Egypt by their hosts." 27 It was they who spoke to Pharaoh king of Egypt about bringing out the people of Israel from Egypt, this Moses and this Aaron.

28 On the day when the LORD spoke to in the service of the tabernacle. Aaron and Moses are four generations removed from Jacob. It is significant that the line does not carry on through Moses but through Aaron. The genealogist is concerned to show that the priest has played an active role in the founding of the nation; his list symbolizes the legitimacy and authority of the priesthood in his own day. Moses is the prophet by whom God spoke in the foundation of the nation, and who instructed the priests. But he has no extant continuation. The priests build on the foundation he laid long ago. The genealogy reflects the spirit of the postexilic period in conceptions of order and authority. Without attacking the priority of Moses it asserts the present priority of Aaron, the first-born of Amram.

28-30. See Exeg. on vss. 10-13, 28-30, p. 890.

show that Moses might have had word-of-mouth reports of the creation of the world. It says:

Here I add a curious observation concerning the manner how Moses could easily and certainly know the history from the creation of the world, by the help of eight persons only . . . : Adam, Methuselah, Sem, . . . Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Levi . . . and Amram. [Moses] might know from [his father Amram] what he had learned from Levi, and so on to Adam.⁶

The book is written by "several learned men," and the man who writes this article goes on to show by computation of ages how this is possible. But even these calculations leave it a mystery how Adam could have been an eyewitness of the happenings of the first five days before he himself was created.

⁶ Article, "Moses."

26-27. And Their Climax.—W. H. Bennett says, "These verses explain the object of the preceding genealogy. We might paraphrase, 'Please observe that the preceding section gives the family history of Aaron and Moses, the deliverers of Israel.'" ⁷ But (see Num. 26:9) someone with a historical conscience has added a note or correction at the end of vs. 27, in order to restore Moses to his proper pre-eminence. One can still feel the satisfaction with which he added this "last word."

6:28-7:13. The Miraculous: Material or Moral?—The only unanswerable and omnipo-

⁷ Exodus (Edinburgh): T. C. & E. C. Jack, n.d.; "The Century Bible"), p. 78.

29 That the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, I am the LORD: speak thou unto Pharaoh king of Egypt all that I say unto thee.

30 And Moses said before the LORD, Behold, I am of uncircumcised lips, and how shall Pharaoh hearken unto me?

7 And the LORD said unto Moses, See, I have made thee a god to Pharaoh; and Aaron thy brother shall be thy prophet.

2 Thou shalt speak all that I command thee; and Aaron thy brother shall speak unto Pharaoh, that he send the children of Israel out of his land.

3 And I will harden Pharaoh's heart, and multiply my signs and my wonders in the land of Egypt.

4 But Pharaoh shall not hearken unto you, that I may lay my hand upon Egypt, and bring forth mine armies, and my people the children of Israel, out of the land of Egypt by great judgments.

Moses in the land of Egypt, 29 the LORD said to Moses, "I am the LORD; tell Pharaoh king of Egypt all that I say to you." 30 But Moses said to the LORD, "Behold, I am of uncircumcised lips; how then shall Pharaoh

7 listen to me?" 1 And the LORD said to Moses, "See, I make you as God to Pharaoh; and Aaron your brother shall be your prophet. 2 You shall speak all that I command you; and Aaron your brother shall tell Pharaoh to let the people of Israel go out of his land. 3 But I will harden Pharaoh's heart, and though I multiply my signs and wonders in the land of Egypt, 4 Pharaoh will not listen to you; then I will lay my hand upon Egypt and bring forth my hosts, my people the sons of Israel, out of the land of Egypt by great acts of judg-

4. THE APPOINTMENT OF AARON (7:1-7)

7:1. Moses is to be as God to Pharaoh. In 4:16 he had a role such as this in relation to Aaron, meaning that he would give to Aaron the words to speak. The implication here probably is that in the struggle with Pharaoh Moses will possess the authority of God but will not himself speak. A prophet is one who expresses the will of God in words; he is God's spokesman.

2. In 4:16 Aaron was to be the spokesman of Moses to the people. Both Moses and Aaron were to address Pharaoh (5:1). Here Aaron is made sole spokesman.

3-5. Pharaoh's stubbornness is again anticipated (3:19; 4:21). The point of it is indicated in vs. 5, The Egyptians shall know that I am the LORD (cf. Exeg. on 4:21). The defeat of Pharaoh would constitute the defeat of the gods of Egypt for he was their executive embodiment. The terms signs (אִיּוֹת) and wonders (מוֹפֵת) are synonymous here. Both refer to the special display of God's power, detailed in the plagues, which will attend the deliverance and manifest God's concern for Israel. In addition to this, a sign tent miracle that the forces of righteousness can use effectively against evil is goodness itself. Complete reasonableness and honesty mystify philosophers and politicians alike. Evil can produce by its enchantments a reasonable facsimile of everything. Even when Moses did something (as in 8:18) which was not in their bag of tricks, the magicians were unable to convince Pharaoh that it was the finger of God. He saw that it was just the same kind of thing as had been done before, and that it could be matched by his own men, given a little more time. Jannes and Jambres (II Tim. 3:8) shall proceed no further when it comes to resisting the truth. Even at their own game Aaron was brighter than they were, and Aaron's rod swallowed up their rods, which, while it did not seem to prove anything, was highly satisfactory, as Pharaoh saw. There are all kinds of minor virtues and skills which have no high moral validity, yet are of immense value in convincing ordinary people that the prophet is a "regular fellow." Holy Cross and Notre Dame are chiefly known to the American public as football teams—a far cry from the original meaning of their names; but this very fact disabuses the mind of the public of the idea that there is something unnatural and otherworldly about all religious folk. The athletic minister who plays good baseball with his boys and beats all the old golfing reprobates of his town on the links has a more responsive audience when he speaks out on religion or righteousness than has the old muffled bookworm who shuffles over the parish in galoshes; yet the latter

5 And the Egyptians shall know that I am the LORD, when I stretch forth mine hand upon Egypt, and bring out the children of Israel from among them.

6 And Moses and Aaron did as the LORD commanded them, so did they.

7 And Moses was fourscore years old, and Aaron fourscore and three years old, when they spake unto Pharaoh.

8 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses and unto Aaron, saying,

9 When Pharaoh shall speak unto you, saying, Show a miracle for you: then thou shalt say unto Aaron, Take thy rod, and cast it before Pharaoh, and it shall become a serpent.

10 ¶ And Moses and Aaron went in unto Pharaoh, and they did so as the LORD had commanded: and Aaron cast down his rod before Pharaoh, and before his servants, and it became a serpent.

11 Then Pharaoh also called the wise men and the sorcerers: now the magicians of Egypt, they also did in like manner with their enchantments.

12 For they cast down every man his rod, and they became serpents: but Aaron's rod swallowed up their rods.

13 And he hardened Pharaoh's heart, that he hearkened not unto them; as the LORD had said.

ment. 5 And the Egyptians shall know that I am the LORD, when I stretch forth my hand upon Egypt and bring out the people of Israel from among them." 6 And Moses and Aaron did so; they did as the LORD commanded them. 7 Now Moses was eighty years old, and Aaron eighty-three years old, when they spoke to Pharaoh.

8 And the LORD said to Moses and Aaron, 9 "When Pharaoh says to you, 'Prove yourselves by working a miracle,' then you shall say to Aaron, 'Take your rod and cast it down before Pharaoh, that it may become a serpent.'" 10 So Moses and Aaron went to Pharaoh and did as the LORD commanded; Aaron cast down his rod before Pharaoh and his servants, and it became a serpent. 11 Then Pharaoh summoned the wise men and the sorcerers; and they also, the magicians of Egypt, did the same by their secret arts. 12 For every man cast down his rod, and they became serpents. But Aaron's rod swallowed up their rods. 13 Still Pharaoh's heart was hardened, and he would not listen to them; as the LORD had said.

may be a token such as the rainbow (Gen. 9:12-13), circumcision (Gen. 17:11), or a pledge (3:12). The last of these is synonymous with the predictive element sometimes carried by wonders (I Kings 13:3, 5; Isa. 20:3). The great acts of judgment are the signs and wonders just mentioned. In Israel's deliverance it is not so much Yahweh's moral character as his power and dominion that will be vindicated.

7. Moses' life was divided into three equal periods of forty years each (Deut. 34:7; cf. Acts 7:23). The third period of his life corresponds to the forty years Israel spent in the wilderness, the tradition of which reaches back at least into the eighth century (Amos 2:10).

5. THE EQUIPMENT OF MOSES AND AARON (7:8-13)

8. In P God commissions both Moses and Aaron and equips them with magic powers (cf. 3:11-4:9). These powers are not to be displayed before the people (4:1, 30-31), but before Pharaoh.

9. The rod now is Aaron's, but he will use it when Moses commands. When Aaron casts it "upon the earth" (LXX), it becomes a serpent. The serpent (tannin) is a dragon or primeval monster. In 4:3 another Hebrew word (nāhāsh) is used. That word may also designate a monster (Amos 9:3) but commonly refers to a mere snake. The element of wonder has grown.

10-13. Before Pharaoh, Moses and Aaron carry out the command. But the magicians of Egypt—i.e., the custodians of the powers of the Egyptian gods—match the demonstration. Every man's rod becomes a dragon! However, Aaron's dragon devours all the other 14 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Pharaoh's heart is hardened, he refuseth to let the people go.

14 Then the LORD said to Moses, "Pharaoh's heart is hardened, he refuses to let dragons, just as Yahweh will vanquish all the foreign powers and gods. Here a fanciful imagination has produced an illustration for a very genuine faith in the sovereignty of Israel's God. The Pharaoh remains obdurate as anticipated (vs. 3). The small measure of the divine power Moses and Aaron possess is inadequate. God remains the chief actor in the drama.

III. GOD REVEALS HIS POWER (7:14-18:27)

The first act in the drama of Israel's deliverance has indicated the issue and dimensions of the conflict. Yahweh and Pharaoh, as chief protagonists, prepared for the real contest of strength to come. Obsessed by fear (5:15-21), Pharaoh discarded all reasonableness in pursuing his policy of oppression and extermination designed to keep Israel in his power. In the birth of Moses, with his peculiar natural gifts, and in his religious vocation and commission as the divine instrument in redemption, Yahweh prepared for Israel's deliverance.

Now in a new act the decisive disclosure of power begins. It becomes clear again that whatever Israel's fears or Pharaoh's hopes, from God's point of view the outcome is never in doubt; this is a divine comedy, not a tragedy. In the account of the plagues we see Yahweh take the initiative and, with dramatic suspense, ever more intensely display his might and press his advantage. The situation of the Pharaoh, cornered by a god he did not know (5:1-5), becomes ever more grim. P illustrates this by means of the rout of the proud magicians; the other writers by noting that Pharaoh is willing to make ever greater concessions, even though in the nature of the case these can never be sufficient. This is a struggle between Pharaoh and Yahweh for the establishment of absolute lordship. In the death of the first-born, the institution of Passover, and the departure of the slaves, the furious action reaches its climax. Yahweh takes possession of Israel. Pharaoh is utterly unable to prevent him. Finally, in a desperate effort at a comeback, Pharaoh tries once more to repossess the Hebrew people. At the crossing of the sea, which is the border, Yahweh makes good his victory. Israel is free and knows its God is Lord, the only ruler, and the redeemer of enslaved humanity.

A. GOD MULTIPLIES SIGNS, WONDERS, AND PLAGUES (7:14-11:10)

For an analysis of the literary structure of this section and for an interpretation of the plagues as miracle see Intro., pp. 838-39.

1. THE POLLUTION OF THE NILE (7:14-25)

In its present form this account shows the hands of J, E, and P. According to J (vss. 14, 16, 17a, 18, 24-25) Yahweh killed the fish in the Nile and as a result the water became undrinkable. Pharaoh was relentless, even though the water famine set the Egyptians to dig water holes along the bank. According to E (vss. 15, 17b, 20b, 23[?]) Moses struck the Nile waters with his rod, changing them to blood. For P (vss. 19, 20a, 21b, 22) may be the better man. Lincoln wore a muffler and Einstein is never seen on the tennis courts of Princeton. Still it is good to know a few things in life besides being good; wisdom needs familiarity with more than one realm of thought. God is interested in other things besides religion. Though a man's main interest in life may be the freeing of folk from slavery, it is good also to know something about such frivolities as are represented by Lincoln's stories.

It is a strange fact that piety without intellect or skill does not make a good preacher; but intellect and skill without piety sometimes seem to.⁸

7:14-12:30. The Ten Plagues.—The compiler had at his hand a number of different accounts of the plagues which he has combined into the narrative as it now stands (see Intro., pp. 838-

⁸ See C. E. Montague, Disenchantment (New York: Brentano's, 1922), pp. 84-102.

15 Get thee unto Pharaoh in the morning; lo, he goeth out unto the water; and thou shalt stand by the river's brink against he come; and the rod which was turned to a serpent shalt thou take in thine hand.

16 And thou shalt say unto him, The LORD God of the Hebrews hath sent me unto thee, saying, Let my people go, that they may serve me in the wilderness: and, behold, hitherto thou wouldest not hear.

17 Thus saith the LORD, In this thou shalt know that I am the LORD: behold, I will smite with the rod that is in mine hand upon the waters which are in the river, and they shall be turned to blood.

18 And the fish that is in the river shall die, and the river shall stink; and the Egyptians shall loathe to drink of the water of the river.

19 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, Say unto Aaron, Take thy rod, and stretch out thine hand upon the waters of Egypt, upon their streams, upon their rivers, and upon their ponds, and upon all their pools of water, that they may become blood; and that there may be blood throughout all the land of Egypt, both in vessels of wood, and in vessels of stone.

the people go. 15 Go to Pharaoh in the morning, as he is going out to the water; wait for him by the river's brink, and take in your hand the rod which was turned into a serpent. 16 And you shall say to him, 'The LORD, the God of the Hebrews, sent me to you, saying, "Let my people go, that they may serve me in the wilderness; and behold, you have not yet obeyed." 17 Thus says the LORD, "By this you shall know that I am the LORD: behold, I will strike the water that is in the Nile with the rod that is in my hand, and it shall be turned to blood, 18 and the fish in the Nile shall die, and the Nile shall become foul, and the Egyptians will loathe to drink water from the Nile."'" 19 And the LORD said to Moses, "Say to Aaron, "Take your rod and stretch out your hand over the waters of Egypt, over their rivers, their canals, and their ponds, and all their pools of water, that they may become blood; and there shall be blood throughout all the land of Egypt, both in vessels of wood and in vessels of stone.'"

Aaron did the wonder, and not only the water of the Nile but every bit of water in Egypt was changed to blood. Since the magicians also did the sign—with what water we are not told—Pharaoh hardened his heart.

14. This verse continues 6:1. For hardened J uses כָּבַד while E and P use חָזַק. The Amer. Trans. preserves the distinction by translating the two words as "stubborn" and "obstinate" respectively.

15. The provision to meet Pharaoh at the Nile may reflect the fact that the river was worshiped as a deity and that the ruler personally officiated at the great festivals in its honor, notably at the annual inundation. In the presence of Pharaoh, Yahweh smites Egypt's god of life, the Nile.

16. Let my people go is J's formula. An earlier interview is presupposed by the phrase not yet obeyed (cf. 5:1-5).

17. As it stands, this verse leaves the impression that Yahweh would strike the river with the rod. J and E have been telescoped: for the former, God acts directly; for the latter, through Moses by means of the rod.

19. In P there are no interviews with Pharaoh.

39). For the curious student there are many interesting questions to be solved: Was all the water of a river 3,473 miles long turned into blood? What did Pharaoh and his servants in the palace do without water for seven days? Where did the magicians get the water to turn into blood, since all of it was already blood? It is stated that all the cattle of Egypt died (9:6), yet a little later (9:19) some seem to be alive!

But each story of the composite whole has more consistency, e.g., the plagues in J's story all cease naturally, the Egyptians dig around the Nile to find fresh water, the frogs die, the cattle also, the hailstorm ceases, the wind blows the flies and the locusts away.

While the compiler looks upon them as miraculous, there are analogies for them all in the known natural phenomena of Egypt. The words 20 And Moses and Aaron did so, as the LORD commanded; and he lifted up the rod, and smote the waters that were in the river, in the sight of Pharaoh, and in the sight of his servants; and all the waters that were in the river were turned to blood.

21 And the fish that was in the river died; and the river stank, and the Egyptians could not drink of the water of the river; and there was blood throughout all the land of Egypt.

22 And the magicians of Egypt did so with their enchantments: and Pharaoh's heart was hardened, neither did he hearken unto them; as the LORD had said.

23 And Pharaoh turned and went into his house, neither did he set his heart to this also.

24 And all the Egyptians digged round about the river for water to drink; for they could not drink of the water of the river.

25 And seven days were fulfilled, after that the LORD had smitten the river.

O And the LORD spake unto Moses, Go unto Pharaoh, and say unto him, Thus saith the LORD, Let my people go, that they may serve me.

2 And if thou refuse to let them go, behold, I will smite all thy borders with frogs:

3 And the river shall bring forth frogs abundantly, which shall go up and come into thine house, and into thy bedchamber, and upon thy bed, and into the house of thy servants, and upon thy people, and into thine ovens, and into thy kneadingtroughs:

4 And the frogs shall come up both on thee, and upon thy people, and upon all thy servants.

20 Moses and Aaron did as the LORD commanded; in the sight of Pharaoh and in the sight of his servants, he lifted up the rod and struck the water that was in the Nile, and all the water that was in the Nile turned to blood. 21 And the fish in the Nile died; and the Nile became foul, so that the Egyptians could not drink water from the Nile; and there was blood throughout all the land of Egypt. 22 But the magicians of Egypt did the same by their secret arts; so Pharaoh's heart remained hardened, and he would not listen to them; as the LORD had said. 23 Pharaoh turned and went into his house, and he did not lay even this to heart. 24 And all the Egyptians dug round about the Nile for water to drink, for they could not drink the water of the Nile.

25 Seven days passed after the LORD had struck the Nile. 1 Then the LORD said to Moses, "Go in to Pharaoh and say to him, "Thus says the LORD, "Let my people go, that they may serve me. 2 But if you refuse to let them go, behold, I will plague all your country with frogs; 3 the Nile shall swarm with frogs which shall come up into your house, and into your bedchamber and on your bed, and into the houses of your servants and of your people, and into your ovens and your kneading bowls; 4 the frogs shall come up on you and on your people and on all your servants." "

¹ Ch 7. 26 in Heb

³ Gk: Heb upon your people

20. The opening formula is P but the remainder is E. Only the Nile is changed to blood. Therefore he who lifted up the rod is Moses. The fact that the Nile takes on a reddish color at certain stages in its rise possibly lies at the basis of this story.

21b-22. For P the dramatic progress of Yahweh's battle is presented as a contest with the magicians.

24-25. The Egyptians themselves seek to make good the failure of their god.

2. FROGS (8:1-15=Hebrew 7:26-8:11)

The characteristic demand formula, the manner of the plague's accomplishment as proposed by Yahweh, and the account of Moses' interview with Pharaoh, including the latter's request for Moses' prayer in his behalf, show that this account is mainly from J. But P has replaced J's account of the plague with his own characteristic version (vss. 5-7). The final conclusion is also a P formula (vs. 15b).

8:3-4. Yahweh tells Moses to warn Pharaoh that unless he surrenders the Nile shall swarm with frogs. The intimation seems to be that the Nile slime will spontaneously

5 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, Say unto Aaron, Stretch forth thine hand with thy rod over the streams, over the rivers, and over the ponds, and cause frogs to come up upon the land of Egypt.

6 And Aaron stretched out his hand over the waters of Egypt; and the frogs came up, and covered the land of Egypt.

7 And the magicians did so with their enchantments, and brought up frogs upon the land of Egypt.

8 ¶ Then Pharaoh called for Moses and Aaron, and said, Entreat the LORD, that he may take away the frogs from me, and from my people; and I will let the people go, that they may do sacrifice unto the LORD.

9 And Moses said unto Pharaoh, Glory over me: when shall I entreat for thee, and for thy servants, and for thy people, to destroy the frogs from thee and thy houses, that they may remain in the river only?

10 And he said, To-morrow. And he said, Be it according to thy word; that thou mayest know that there is none like unto the LORD our God.

11 And the frogs shall depart from thee, and from thy houses, and from thy servants, and from thy people; they shall remain in the river only.

5^b And the LORD said to Moses, "Say to Aaron, 'Stretch out your hand with your rod over the rivers, over the canals, and over the pools, and cause frogs to come upon the land of Egypt!'" 6 So Aaron stretched out his hand over the waters of Egypt; and the frogs came up and covered the land of Egypt. 7 But the magicians did the same by their secret arts, and brought frogs upon the land of Egypt.

8 Then Pharaoh called Moses and Aaron, and said, "Entreat the LORD to take away the frogs from me and from my people; and I will let the people go to sacrifice to the LORD." 9 Moses said to Pharaoh, "Be pleased to command me when I am to entreat, for you and for your servants and for your people, that the frogs be destroyed from you and your houses and be left only in the Nile." 10 And he said, "Tomorrow." Moses said, "Be it as you say, that you may know that there is no one like the LORD our God." 11 The frogs shall depart from you and your houses and your servants and your people; generate frogs. The belief that the river mud possesses this power persists until today and was widely accepted in the past (John A. Wilson in Intellectual Adventure of Ancient Man, pp. 50-51).

* Ch 8. 1 in Heb

5-7. For P, as in the first plague, every body of water in Egypt is affected. Aaron's rod causes the frogs to come upon the land. The magicians continue to match the power of Yahweh.

8. In asking Moses to entreat the LORD, Pharaoh recognizes him as the authentic spokesman of an actual deity. He no longer scorns Yahweh.

9-11. Moses asks Pharaoh to set the time for the prayer that will stop the scourge so that, at the disappearance of the frogs, Pharaoh will have another "sign" that there is no one like the LORD our God. Such concern for coincidence is common in the Bible (cf. Matt. 8:13; 15:28).

"red water" are still used in Egypt of the waters of the Nile during the period of the year when the red soil of the Abyssinian mountains tinges it during its annual rise, and during July and August the presence of algae in the water tints it red. Plagues of frogs occur not infrequently in Egypt. Egypt, especially the Delta, suffers much (after the recession of the overflow of the Nile) from insects of all sorts. It has been called "The Eldorado of Flies." It is true that cattle in Egypt suffer less from epidemic diseases than elsewhere, yet when the herds are let out to graze such diseases do occur. Although the judgment of the Exeg. is that these facts should not be given weight, yet the details seem so true to life that one can imagine that the dynasty of the Pharaohs was weakened by a series of pestilences, epidemics, and plagues to the point of loosening its hold on its slave population. The part played by such scourges in the history of the world is astonishing (see the index of any popular world history such as that of H. G. Wells).

The stories of the plagues are told with considerable literary art, like the succeeding con-

12 And Moses and Aaron went out from Pharaoh: and Moses cried unto the LORD because of the frogs which he had brought against Pharaoh.

13 And the LORD did according to the word of Moses; and the frogs died out of the houses, out of the villages, and out of the fields.

14 And they gathered them together upon heaps; and the land stank.

15 But when Pharaoh saw that there was respite, he hardened his heart, and hearkened not unto them; as the LORD had said.

16 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Say unto Aaron, Stretch out thy rod, and smite the dust of the land, that it may become lice throughout all the land of Egypt.

17 And they did so; for Aaron stretched out his hand with his rod, and smote the dust of the earth, and it became lice in man, and in beast; all the dust of the land became lice throughout all the land of Egypt.

18 And the magicians did so with their enchantments to bring forth lice, but they could not: so there were lice upon man, and upon beast.

they shall be left only in the Nile." 12 So Moses and Aaron went out from Pharaoh; and Moses cried to the LORD concerning the frogs, as he had agreed with Pharaoh.¹

13 And the LORD did according to the word of Moses; the frogs died out of the houses and courtyards and out of the fields. 14 And they gathered them together in heaps, and the land stank. 15 But when Pharaoh saw that there was a respite, he hardened his heart, and would not listen to them; as the LORD had said.

16 Then the LORD said to Moses, "Say to Aaron, 'Stretch out your rod and strike the dust of the earth, that it may become gnats throughout all the land of Egypt.'"

17 And they did so; Aaron stretched out his hand with his rod, and struck the dust of the earth, and there came gnats on man and beast; all the dust of the earth became gnats throughout all the land of Egypt. 18 The magicians tried by their secret arts to bring forth gnats, but they could not. So there

¹ Or which he had brought upon Pharaoh

15. But Pharaoh misreads the "sign." He thinks he detects "softness" in Yahweh. He is more impressed by his own relief than by the power of God, and he forgets his promise.

3. GNATS (8:16-19=Hebrew 8:12-15)

The account of this plague is entirely by P and without interruption exhibits all the features of this writer with respect to the plagues discussed above.

16. The insects have been understood as lice (KJV; ASV), mosquitoes (Amer. Trans.), sand flies or fleas (ASV mg.), and gnats (RSV). The term "gnat" seems best, but it must probably be understood as referring to the sand fly, an insect which carries dengue fever and is a scourge in all the Near East. The LXX adds "on man and beast" after gnats, which, in view of vss. 17-18, seems probable.

17. The phrase And they did so is lacking in the LXX. It must refer to Moses and Aaron (cf. 7:20). Assuming that in all the land of Egypt the dust would produce gnats, P concludes that all the dust of the earth became gnats! In a country as dusty as Egypt this is an exaggeration that defies all understanding.

18-19. For the first time Yahweh's power outstrips that of the magicians. Another power, the finger of God (Ps. 8:3), works through Moses and Aaron. But Pharaoh, who tests of some great tournament. The sympathy, patience, and ingenuity of Yahweh are emphasized; and if some of the ill will felt by the authors against the oppressors of their people has crept into the character of the God they portray, one can understand and forgive. One can read the list of the plagues like a tragic history of the troubles of life. Starting with general unpleasantness, like the lack of good water and the stink of dead fish; followed by unpleasant company, hopping and croaking around everywhere; then stinging flocks of minor irritations, lice and flies; till in full earnest comes real sickness of man and beast, boils and blains and 19 Then the magicians said unto Pharaoh, This is the finger of God: and Pharaoh's heart was hardened, and he hearkened not unto them; as the LORD had said.

20 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Rise up early in the morning, and stand before Pharaoh; lo, he cometh forth to the water; and say unto him, Thus saith the LORD, Let my people go, that they may serve me.

21 Else, if thou wilt not let my people go, behold, I will send swarms of flies upon thee, and upon thy servants, and upon thy people, and into thy houses: and the houses of the Egyptians shall be full of swarms of flies, and also the ground whereon they are.

22 And I will sever in that day the land of Goshen, in which my people dwell, that no swarms of flies shall be there; to the end thou mayest know that I am the LORD in the midst of the earth.

23 And I will put a division between my people and thy people: to-morrow shall this sign be.

24 And the LORD did so; and there came a grievous swarm of flies into the house of Pharaoh, and into his servants' houses, and into all the land of Egypt: the land was corrupted by reason of the swarm of flies.

were gnats on man and beast. 19 And the magicians said to Pharaoh, "This is the finger of God." But Pharaoh's heart was hardened, and he would not listen to them; as the LORD had said.

20 Then the LORD said to Moses, "Rise up early in the morning and wait for Pharaoh, as he goes out to the water, and say to him, 'Thus says the LORD, "Let my people go, that they may serve me. 21 Else, if you will not let my people go, behold, I will send swarms of flies on you and your servants and your people, and into your houses; and the houses of the Egyptians shall be filled with swarms of flies, and also the ground on which they stand. 22 But on that day I will set apart the land of Goshen, where my people dwell, so that no swarms of flies shall be there; that you may know that I am the LORD in the midst of the earth. 23 Thus I will put a division^m between my people and your people. By to-morrow shall this sign be."'" 24 And the LORD did so; there came great swarms of flies into the house of Pharaoh and into his servants' houses, and in all the land of Egypt the land was ruined by reason of the flies.

^m Gk Vg: Heb set redemption

has already recognized that he is in conflict with an actual deity (8:8), does not relent. In vs. 19b we have the regular concluding formula of P and, consequently, the pronoun them must refer to Moses and Aaron rather than to the magicians.

4. FLIES (8:20-32=Hebrew 8:16-28)

This account is entirely by J and it clearly shows his pattern for relating the plagues. It seems probable that the third plague is simply P's duplicate version for this one.

21. J's announcement of a plague is conditional. Pharaoh is given a chance to repent (cf. vs. 2; 9:2). In Hebrew "the swarm" is the term for our swarms of flies (cf. Ps. 78:45). A moving mass of insects is indicated. Flies and insects were so thick in Egypt that they were synonymous with the country as such (Isa. 7:18; 18:1).

22. This is the first time Israel's relation to Egypt's plagues is mentioned. Its exemption from this plague will be a "sign" that Yahweh is God. We are reminded of the sign of Gideon's fleece (Judg. 6:36-40).

murrain; followed by storms, lightning and hail; and real enemies in battalions, locusts, the first inventors of the scorched earth policy; then terror in darkness; and death.

One can almost hear the pathetic voice of Pharaoh in later life, telling the story of how he lost all his valuable slaves. "What could I do?" one can hear him say. "Everything was against me." We can be sure that sooner or later he would repeat again, "But the root of all the trouble was that man Moses. He was an agitator. If he had not stirred them up, they would be contentedly with us today." Or if you listen closely, it is George III of England who is speaking, before madness overtook him, telling again to some favorite the tragic story of how he lost his American colonies. "Everything was against me," one can hear him say. Then sooner or later

25 ¶ And Pharaoh called for Moses and for Aaron, and said, Go ye, sacrifice to your God in the land.

26 And Moses said, It is not meet so to do; for we shall sacrifice the abomination of the Egyptians to the LORD our God: lo, shall we sacrifice the abomination of the Egyptians before their eyes, and will they not stone us?

27 We will go three days' journey into the wilderness, and sacrifice to the LORD our God, as he shall command us.

28 And Pharaoh said, I will let you go, that ye may sacrifice to the LORD your God in the wilderness; only ye shall not go very far away: entreat for me.

29 And Moses said, Behold, I go out from thee, and I will entreat the LORD that the swarms of flies may depart from Pharaoh, from his servants, and from his people, to-morrow: but let not Pharaoh deal deceitfully any more in not letting the people go to sacrifice to the LORD.

30 And Moses went out from Pharaoh, and entreated the LORD.

31 And the LORD did according to the word of Moses; and he removed the swarms of flies from Pharaoh, from his servants, and from his people; there remained not one.

32 And Pharaoh hardened his heart at this time also, neither would he let the people go.

25 Then Pharaoh called Moses and Aaron, and said, "Go, sacrifice to your God within the land." 26 But Moses said, "It would not be right to do so; for we shall sacrifice to the LORD our God offerings abominable to the Egyptians. If we sacrifice offerings abominable to the Egyptians before their eyes, will they not stone us? 27 We must go three days' journey into the wilderness and sacrifice to the LORD our God as he will command us." 28 So Pharaoh said, "I will let you go, to sacrifice to the LORD your God in the wilderness; only you shall not go very far away. Make entreaty for me." 29 Then Moses said, "Behold, I am going out from you and I will pray to the LORD that the swarms of flies may depart from Pharaoh, from his servants, and from his people, tomorrow; only let not Pharaoh deal falsely again by not letting the people go to sacrifice to the LORD." 30 So Moses went out from Pharaoh and prayed to the LORD. 31 And the LORD did as Moses asked, and removed the swarms of flies from Pharaoh, from his servants, and from his people; not one remained. 32 But Pharaoh hardened his heart this time also, and did not let the people go.

25-26. Pharaoh makes a concession; Israel may sacrifice in Egypt. God's real plan compels Moses to refuse but he justifies the refusal by a clever use of fact (cf. 1:19). The Elephantine Papyri show that Egyptians of a later era actually did react violently to Israel's worship (A. E. Cowley, Aramaic Papyri of the Fifth Century B.C. [Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1923], pp. 108-22). Most of Israel's animal sacrifices would have offended Egyptians.

27-32. To Moses' demand for a three-day journey Pharaoh replies vaguely that they must not go very far away. But he is desperate to have the plague stopped and begs Moses to intercede with the God into whose hand he is more and more falling. Despite Moses' warning, he again confuses with his own power the respite Yahweh gives him.

he would sum it all up again, "If it had not been for that man Franklin, everything would be well. It was he who stirred up all the trouble." Yet back of all the plagues, the catastrophes, and mischances, was the real cause of the trouble: the hardness of a tyrant heart. The story is sad from Pharaoh's point of view throughout history; just when everything is comfortable, and the treasure cities, Pithom and Raamses, are being built at last, just then somebody like Moses comes along stirring up discontent among the brickmakers or the coal miners, and we have to go through another "period of unrest"; the rules of the game which made life so pleasant for the few have to be revised again. But the happy side of the story is that after each revision the few 9 Then the LORD said unto Moses, Go in unto Pharaoh, and tell him, Thus saith the LORD God of the Hebrews, Let my people go, that they may serve me.

2 For if thou refuse to let them go, and wilt hold them still,

3 Behold, the hand of the LORD is upon thy cattle which is in the field, upon the horses, upon the asses, upon the camels, upon the oxen, and upon the sheep: there shall be a very grievous murrain.

4 And the LORD shall sever between the cattle of Israel and the cattle of Egypt: and there shall nothing die of all that is the children's of Israel.

5 And the LORD appointed a set time, saying, To-morrow the LORD shall do this thing in the land.

6 And the LORD did that thing on the morrow, and all the cattle of Egypt died: but of the cattle of the children of Israel died not one.

9 Then the LORD said to Moses, "Go in to Pharaoh, and say to him, 'Thus says the LORD, the God of the Hebrews, 'Let my people go, that they may serve me.

2 For if you refuse to let them go and still hold them, 3 behold, the hand of the LORD will fall with a very severe plague upon your cattle which are in the field, the horses, the asses, the camels, the herds, and the flocks. 4 But the LORD will make a distinction between the cattle of Israel and the cattle of Egypt, so that nothing shall die of all that belongs to the people of Israel.'"

5 And the LORD set a time, saying, "Tomorrow the LORD will do this thing in the land."

6 And on the morrow the LORD did this thing; all the cattle of the Egyptians died, but of the cattle of the people of Israel not

5. CATTLE PLAGUE (9:1-7)

This account of a plague by J is abbreviated. Pharaoh does not send for Moses to make his confession and ask for intercession. No hint is given on the end of the plague.

9:1-3. The announcement of the plague is again conditional. But this time Pharaoh receives a brief twenty-four hour ultimatum (vs. 5)! It is impossible to specify the disease that constitutes the plague; the common view that it was anthrax is not demonstrable. All the cattle were struck, camels among others. The reference to camels in thirteenth-century Egypt seems anachronistic, for it is not likely that this animal was domesticated in Egypt as early as that. Even in the seminomadic area of the Midianites and elsewhere the domestication of the camel, though earlier than in Egypt, had hardly begun at this time. The references to camels in the patriarchal stories are almost surely anachronistic. The facts of this much discussed question seem well stated by W. F. Albright: "In the thirteenth century B.C. the domestication of the camel had not yet progressed to a point where it could have any decisive effect upon nomadism; no traces of domestic camels have been yet discovered in any contemporary record or excavation. It is not until the eleventh century that camel-riding nomads first appear in our documentary sources." (Archaeology and the Religion of Israel [Baltimore: Johns Hopkins Press, 1942], p. 96.)

4-7. Pharaoh notices the sign of Yahweh in the exemption of Israel, but remains unmoved.

who get something out of life become a few more, and the people as a whole pitch their tents one stage nearer the land which flows with milk and honey. The Bible believes that God has made a covenant with men to bring them at last to that promised land.

But why does God not do something quickly? In days of wicked oppression this question perplexes the humble believer. It is one of the difficulties about which thoughtful parishioners are always asking their pastors, and they are seldom satisfied with the answers. In 9:14-16 there is an interpolation which gives in its different versions two answers. The RSV and the Hebrew text imply that God delays action in the hope of converting Pharaoh, that you may know, . . . to show you my power. The LXX and the KJV suggest that God is using Pharaoh, letting him do his worst, in order that in his ultimate downfall God's glory may be manifest, to show in thee my power. It must be admitted that both explanations will seem to the victims

7 And Pharaoh sent, and, behold, there was not one of the cattle of the Israelites dead. And the heart of Pharaoh was hardened, and he did not let the people go.

8 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses and unto Aaron, Take to you handfuls of ashes of the furnace, and let Moses sprinkle it toward the heaven in the sight of Pharaoh.

9 And it shall become small dust in all the land of Egypt, and shall be a boil breaking forth with blains upon man, and upon beast, throughout all the land of Egypt.

10 And they took ashes of the furnace, and stood before Pharaoh; and Moses sprinkled it up toward heaven; and it became a boil breaking forth with blains upon man, and upon beast.

11 And the magicians could not stand before Moses because of the boils; for the boil was upon the magicians, and upon all the Egyptians.

12 And the LORD hardened the heart of Pharaoh, and he hearkened not unto them; as the LORD had spoken unto Moses.

13 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Rise up early in the morning, and stand before Pharaoh, and say unto him, Thus saith the LORD God of the Hebrews, Let my people go, that they may serve me.

one died. 7 And Pharaoh sent, and behold, not one of the cattle of the Israelites was dead. But the heart of Pharaoh was hardened, and he did not let the people go.

8 And the LORD said to Moses and Aaron, "Take handfuls of ashes from the kiln, and let Moses throw them toward heaven in the sight of Pharaoh. 9 And it shall become fine dust over all the land of Egypt, and become boils breaking out in sores on man and beast throughout all the land of Egypt."

10 So they took ashes from the kiln, and stood before Pharaoh, and Moses threw them toward heaven, and it became boils breaking out in sores on man and beast.

11 And the magicians could not stand before Moses because of the boils, for the boils were upon the magicians and upon all the Egyptians. 12 But the LORD hardened the heart of Pharaoh, and he did not listen to them; as the LORD had spoken to Moses.

13 Then the LORD said to Moses, "Rise up early in the morning and stand before Pharaoh, and say to him, 'Thus says the LORD, the God of the Hebrews, 'Let my

6. BOILS (9:8-12)

This account departs from the normal P type in two ways: Moses performs the wonder in Pharaoh's presence, and a form of magical action of the sympathetic type replaces the use of the miraculous rod.

9. The nature of this plague is reminiscent of the one preceding it. This may represent the P version of the same incident. However, Hugo Gressmann felt that the fine dust over all the land pointed to the darkness of the ninth plague (Mose und seine Zeit [Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1951], p. 92).

10. Some sort of malignant pustule constituted the plague. Skin diseases were prominently associated with Egypt (Deut. 28:27, 35). In the previous plague all the cattle had died (vs. 6). If these accounts were to be understood as a sober recital of fact, it would be difficult to know what beast was left to suffer this disease.

11. The magicians had already given up the struggle against Yahweh (8:19). Now they can no longer protect even themselves. The contest moves on to the full victory of the Lord.

7. HAIL (9:13-35)

The core of this account is from J (vss. 13, 17-18, 23b-24, 26-30, 33-34). In vss. 22, 23a, 25, 35 we seem to have bits of E, with a conclusion from P in vs. 35. Three novel items that do not fit the literary pattern of the plague accounts attract our attention (vss. 14-16, 19-21, 31-33). They seem to be features introduced by a redactor's hand to interpret and harmonize the plague accounts.

14 For I will at this time send all my plagues upon thine heart, and upon thy servants, and upon thy people; that thou mayest know that there is none like me in all the earth.

15 For now I will stretch out my hand, that I may smite thee and thy people with pestilence; and thou shalt be cut off from the earth.

16 And in very deed for this cause have I raised thee up, for to show in thee my power; and that my name may be declared throughout all the earth.

people go, that they may serve me. 14 For this time I will send all my plagues upon your heart, and upon your servants and your people, that you may know that there is none like me in all the earth. 15 For by now I could have put forth my hand and struck you and your people with pestilence, and you would have been cut off from the earth; 16 but for this purpose have I let you live, to show you my power, so that my name may be declared throughout all the earth.

14. The phrase upon your heart gives no real meaning. It seems best to emend the Hebrew text (אל לבה [ה] אלה בך) and read "I will send all these my plagues upon you." It is impossible to be sure whether the plagues refer to the variety of calamities J combines in this seventh plague (vss. 23b-24) or to all the plagues, especially those still to come. If, as it seems, we have here an interpolation by an editor who seeks to explain why the destruction of Pharaoh was such a long process, the vagueness is natural, though his concern is with the plagues as a whole.

15. The question discussed in the interpolation (vss. 14-16) is why Yahweh does not dispose of self-styled gods and tyrants—Pharaoh or any other—more quickly than he does. It is not a lack of capacity on God's part. He could have cut off Pharaoh from the earth at a single stroke. This writer insists that this slowness of the "mills of God" is actually a demonstration of his power.

16. God has maintained Pharaoh for his own purpose. The belief that God raised . . . up (KJV; cf. Rom. 9:17) tyrants was prevalent in Israel too but is not explicitly stated here. The RSV follows the Hebrew text in to show you my power, and this is in harmony with vs. 14, that you may know. But the LXX, followed by the KJV, says that it is God's purpose to show in thee my power. Thus, Pharaoh is not just to learn about Yahweh but is actually the means by which God makes himself known in the world. This appears to be the real concern of the editor. For this interpreter these plagues are not just God's futile effort to "convert" Pharaoh; they are an illustration of the view that God makes himself known in his power in the midst of and in conformity with the characteristic processes of nature and history, even as these are exemplified in a tyrant. God could no doubt have disposed of Pharaoh at a single stroke, but God does not work that way (cf. Matt. 26:53); and the interpreter's reason for saying so is that history is not like that. Once established, tyrants and oppressions have a sort of natural life of their own which must be lived out. But in the midst of this process which opposes him, and by means of it, God manifests his power. This writer's faith is tough and realistic; it became deeply imbedded in Jewish tradition. His words are used by Paul (Rom. 9:17) to illustrate that in the succession of the covenant of Moses by that of Christ there is likewise a vindication of God's freedom.

of totalitarian butchery but as vacant chaff, well meant for grain. The fact is that as long as God is looked upon as a benevolent dictator, committed to the efficacy of force in cleaning up bad situations, there is no satisfactory reply to this poignant question. Only when one has grasped the fact that God works through men in human affairs, does one come to understand something of the answers given to this question by the incarnation and the agony on the cross. The wished-for short cut of miraculous intervention would bring all human history to an end and destroy life's greatness and meaning. Pharaoh was allowed to proceed on his way partly to give him a last chance, partly that opportunity might be given to the oppressed people to find a triumphant way out of captivity and into the Promised Land, thus demonstrating the power and wisdom of God.

The early writer (J) has a direct story to tell 17 As yet exaltest thou thyself against my people, that thou wilt not let them go?

18 Behold, to-morrow about this time I will cause it to rain a very grievous hail, such as hath not been in Egypt since the foundation thereof even until now.

19 Send therefore now, and gather thy cattle, and all that thou hast in the field; for upon every man and beast which shall be found in the field, and shall not be brought home, the hail shall come down upon them, and they shall die.

20 He that feared the word of the LORD among the servants of Pharaoh made his servants and his cattle flee into the houses:

21 And he that regarded not the word of the LORD left his servants and his cattle in the field.

22 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Stretch forth thine hand toward heaven, that there may be hail in all the land of Egypt, upon man, and upon beast, and upon every herb of the field, throughout the land of Egypt.

23 And Moses stretched forth his rod toward heaven: and the LORD sent thunder and hail, and the fire ran along upon the ground; and the LORD rained hail upon the land of Egypt.

24 So there was hail, and fire mingled with the hail, very grievous, such as there was none like it in all the land of Egypt since it became a nation.

25 And the hail smote throughout all the land of Egypt all that was in the field, both man and beast; and the hail smote every herb of the field, and brake every tree of the field.

17 You are still exalting yourself against my people, and will not let them go. 18 Behold, tomorrow about this time I will cause very heavy hail to fall, such as never has been in Egypt from the day it was founded until now. 19 Now therefore send, get your cattle and all that you have in the field into safe shelter; for the hail shall come down upon every man and beast that is in the field and is not brought home, and they shall die.”’”

20 Then he who feared the word of the LORD among the servants of Pharaoh made his slaves and his cattle flee into the houses; 21 but he who did not regard the word of the LORD left his slaves and his cattle in the field.

22 And the LORD said to Moses, “Stretch forth your hand toward heaven, that there may be hail in all the land of Egypt, upon man and beast and every plant of the field, throughout the land of Egypt.” 23 Then Moses stretched forth his rod toward heaven; and the LORD sent thunder and hail, and fire ran down to the earth. And the LORD rained hail upon the land of Egypt; 24 there was hail, and fire flashing continually in the midst of the hail, very heavy hail, such as had never been in all the land of Egypt since it became a nation. 25 The hail struck down everything that was in the field throughout all the land of Egypt, both man and beast; and the hail struck down every plant of the field, and 19-21. There is an “underground” at Pharaoh’s court which presages the imminent breakup of the tyrant’s resistance to Yahweh.

23b-24. Violent storms of this sort are indeed unknown in Egypt (cf. vs. 18). The description probably owes something to a later observation of them in Palestine, where they do occur. J here speaks of thunder and flood as well as hail (cf. vss. 22, 24 [E]).

of quick results, but the later accounts were written by those who had more dramatic instincts and thought that greater capital could be made out of the material by emphasizing the supernatural and delaying the outcome by suspense. Success came too quickly in the early narrative. The material has been disarranged, but something like the following was intended: The Egyptians promised nothing after the first plague, because they were able to reproduce it themselves. The effect of the next plagues is greater and, in order to get rid of them, Pharaoh promises to let the people go. But as soon as the scare is over, he cannot bring himself to keep his promise. After the second plague (frogs) he simply refuses to keep his promise. After the other plagues he shifts his ground. The third plague (vermin) forces him to give the people

26 Only in the land of Goshen, where the children of Israel were, was there no hail.

27 ¶ And Pharaoh sent, and called for Moses and Aaron, and said unto them, I have sinned this time: the LORD is righteous, and I and my people are wicked.

28 Entreat the LORD (for it is enough) that there be no more mighty thunderings and hail; and I will let you go, and ye shall stay no longer.

29 And Moses said unto him, As soon as I am gone out of the city, I will spread abroad my hands unto the LORD; and the thunder shall cease, neither shall there be any more hail; that thou mayest know how that the earth is the LORD's.

30 But as for thee and thy servants, I know that ye will not yet fear the LORD God.

31 And the flax and the barley was smitten: for the barley was in the ear, and the flax was balled.

32 But the wheat and the rye were not smitten: for they were not grown up.

33 And Moses went out of the city from Pharaoh, and spread abroad his hands unto the LORD: and the thunders and hail ceased, and the rain was not poured upon the earth.

shattered every tree of the field. 26 Only in the land of Goshen, where the people of Israel were, there was no hail.

27 Then Pharaoh sent, and called Moses and Aaron, and said to them, "I have sinned this time; the LORD is in the right, and I and my people are in the wrong. 28 Entreat the LORD; for there has been enough of this thunder and hail; I will let you go, and you shall stay no longer." 29 Moses said to him, "As soon as I have gone out of the city, I will stretch out my hands to the LORD; the thunder will cease, and there will be no more hail, that you may know that the earth is the LORD's. 30 But as for you and your servants, I know that you do not yet fear the LORD God." 31 (The flax and the barley were ruined, for the barley was in the ear and the flax was in bud. 32 But the wheat and the spelt were not ruined, for they are late in coming up.) 33 So Moses went out of the city from Pharaoh, and stretched out his hands to the LORD; and the thunder and the hail ceased, and the rain no longer poured upon the earth.

27-30. Moses is again summoned by Pharaoh to be asked to intercede with the Lord. Pharaoh admits he is beaten: I have sinned. He makes a more generous promise.

31-32. The connection between vss. 30 and 33 is interpreted by an explanatory note. A harmonist wanted to make clear that the hail had left some herbage for locusts (10:15)! Flax and barley mature a full month before wheat and spelt in Egypt. The reading for they are late in coming up (RSV) is too free and misleading. The KJV and the ASV are preferable. The Hebrew word means "concealed." Since only a month intervenes between the maturation of the earlier and later crops, we must conclude that the wheat and spelt had not yet "headed out" at the time of the storm. The ears were still "concealed" in the young growing plants. Hail can do little damage to a grain crop at that stage. Even if the pliable young stems are somewhat shattered, they will grow out again.

the right to sacrifice to their God, but inside the land of Egypt. Moses rejects this compromise on the ground that the sacrificial ceremonies of the Hebrews would be so different from those of the Egyptians as to cause bigoted riots among the Egyptians. The result of the fourth plague (pestilence) was that Pharaoh said they could go, but not as far from the border as they desired. But Moses holds to his requisite of three days' journey. The fifth plague of hail brings the further concession on the part of Pharaoh that the men could go, but no one else. Moses rejects this suggestion, as the sacrifice requires the presence of all. Pharaoh, after the sixth plague (locusts), goes a little further and permits men, women, and children to go, but would keep their flocks and herds in Egypt; Moses answers that this would enrage Yahweh more than anything, as the flocks and herds are needed for the sacrifice. Thus everything is now ready for Moses to play his trump card, and proclaim the last plague which will free the people.

34 And when Pharaoh saw that the rain and the hail and the thunders were ceased, he sinned yet more, and hardened his heart, he and his servants.

35 And the heart of Pharaoh was hardened, neither would he let the children of Israel go; as the LORD had spoken by Moses.

10 And the LORD said unto Moses, Go in unto Pharaoh: for I have hardened his heart, and the heart of his servants, that I might show these my signs before him:

2 And that thou mayest tell in the ears of thy son, and of thy son's son, what things I have wrought in Egypt, and my signs which I have done among them; that ye may know how that I am the LORD.

34 But when Pharaoh saw that the rain and the hail and the thunder had ceased, he sinned yet again, and hardened his heart, he and his servants. 35 So the heart of Pharaoh was hardened, and he did not let the people of Israel go; as the LORD had spoken through Moses.

10 Then the LORD said to Moses, "Go in to Pharaoh; for I have hardened his heart and the heart of his servants, that I may show these signs of mine among them, 2 and that you may tell in the hearing of your son and of your son's son how I have made sport of the Egyptians and what signs I have done among them; that you may know that I am the LORD."

8. Locusts (10:1-20, 24-26, 28-29)

J is the chief source for the account of this plague also. Bits of E are discernible in Moses' use of the rod to bring the plague (vss. 12-13a), and the conclusion (vs. 20) is also E. After Moses has warned Pharaoh of the coming plague, and before it strikes, some of the court nobles compel the ruler to recall Moses for the purpose of arbitrating the conflict (vss. 7-8) but this inevitably fails since in a struggle with Yahweh for lordship a truce is unthinkable. He alone is God. But this attempt at negotiation before a plague strikes is a new feature in this series of accounts. After the plague has come Pharaoh, as usual in J, sends for Moses to ask him to intercede. But here an attempt at negotiation is conspicuously absent. One inevitably gets the feeling that this characteristic bit of J must have been transferred to some other location. Is it perhaps the interview that now precedes the actual coming of the plague? Or is it, as Beer suggests (Exodus, pp. 55-57), the account of the interview that now forms a part of the next plague (vss. 24-26, 28-29)? That interview, which ends in a violent scene at which Pharaoh sentences Moses to death if he dares to appear before him again, is the natural conclusion of the whole series of plagues leading up to the death of the first-born. It shows unmistakably the hand of J and seems to fit the note of finality introduced by Pharaoh in vs. 17, where he asks for forgiveness only this once. It is also strange that in its present position this interview of Moses with Pharaoh, in which the latter offers concessions, is not accompanied by his request for Moses' intercession to stop the plague. Previously such a request occurs without the offer of concessions as a bribe. This is a strong argument for transferring these verses to the account of the eighth plague. Such a transfer reduces the next plague to a mere skeleton, all from E. It was perhaps to fill out this skeletal account and provide it with dramatic force appropriate to its place in the series that the hypothetical transfer was originally made.

10:1-2. The instruction to Go in to Pharaoh is in the familiar J pattern. But this is at once followed by a commentary in the spirit of Deuteronomy. This is perhaps an

10:1-2. *The Beginning of the End: Locusts.*²—One swarm of locusts which crossed the Red Sea in 1889 was estimated to be two thousand square miles in extent. In Cyprus in 1881 official reports state that 1,300 tons of locust eggs were destroyed. Swarms have been seen at sea 1,200 miles from land. The Arabs today are losers every year by swarms bred in the land or carried to them by winds. They wrap the spring clusters of dates around with wisps of dry foliage for protection, and afterward avenge themselves on the ravenous hordes by beating down the insects with palm branches, then toasting, and eating

² See G. A. Smith, The Book of the Twelve Prophets (London: Harper & Bros., 1928; "Expositor's Bible"), II, 390-408; Joel 1:6-10.

3 And Moses and Aaron came in unto Pharaoh, and said unto him, Thus saith the LORD God of the Hebrews, How long wilt thou refuse to humble thyself before me? let my people go, that they may serve me.

4 Else, if thou refuse to let my people go, behold, to-morrow will I bring the locusts into thy coast:

5 And they shall cover the face of the earth, that one cannot be able to see the earth: and they shall eat the residue of that which is escaped, which remaineth unto you from the hail, and shall eat every tree which groweth for you out of the field:

6 And they shall fill thy houses, and the houses of all thy servants, and the houses of all the Egyptians; which neither thy fathers, nor thy fathers' fathers have seen, since the day that they were upon the earth unto this day. And he turned himself, and went out from Pharaoh.

7 And Pharaoh's servants said unto him, How long shall this man be a snare unto us? let the men go, that they may serve the LORD their God: knowest thou not yet that Egypt is destroyed?

8 And Moses and Aaron were brought again unto Pharaoh: and he said unto them, Go, serve the LORD your God: but who are they that shall go?

9 And Moses said, We will go with our young and with our old, with our sons and with our daughters, with our flocks and with our herds will we go; for we must hold a feast unto the LORD.

10 And he said unto them, Let the LORD be so with you, as I will let you go, and your little ones: look to it; for evil is before you.

3 So Moses and Aaron went in to Pharaoh, and said to him, "Thus says the LORD, the God of the Hebrews, 'How long will you refuse to humble yourself before me? Let my people go, that they may serve me.

4 For if you refuse to let my people go, behold, tomorrow I will bring locusts into your country, 5 and they shall cover the face of the land, so that no one can see the land; and they shall eat what is left to you after the hail, and they shall eat every tree of yours which grows in the field, 6 and they shall fill your houses, and the houses of all your servants and of all the Egyptians; as neither your fathers nor your grandfathers have seen, from the day they came on earth to this day.'" Then he turned and went out from Pharaoh.

7 And Pharaoh's servants said to him, "How long shall this man be a snare to us? Let the men go, that they may serve the LORD their God; do you not yet understand that Egypt is ruined?" 8 So Moses and Aaron were brought back to Pharaoh; and he said to them, "Go, serve the LORD your God; but who are to go?" 9 And Moses said, "We will go with our young and our old; we will go with our sons and daughters and with our flocks and herds, for we must hold a feast to the LORD." 10 And he said to them, "The LORD be with you, if ever I let you and your little ones go! Look, you have editor's addition. In contrast to J (8:15, 32; 9:34) he tells us that God has hardened Pharaoh's heart. The purpose of this is to make Yahweh great in Israel. It creates an occasion for the Lord to manifest his power; and so Israelites will be able to tell their sons and grandsons, forever after, how God made sport of the Egyptians. Far from being a sign of weakness, this long series of plagues is the ironical dallying of Yahweh (cf. 9:14-16).

3-6. The usual twenty-four hour warning is issued. Locusts are a scourge even more frequent in Palestine than in Egypt.

7-16. The forces in Egypt ready to submit to Yahweh (9:20) now appear strong enough to compel the stubborn Pharaoh to recall Moses for the purpose of negotiation. Moses raises the demand for a complete surrender, except for the plunder which the Israelites will presently demand of the Egyptians (3:22; 12:35-36). This absolute demand Pharaoh bitterly rejects. In sarcasm he gives his "blessing" (vs. 10); he hopes that the divine protection on the journey may be as nonexistent as his permit to go. He offers 11 Not so: go now ye that are men, and serve the LORD; for that ye did desire. And they were driven out from Pharaoh's presence.

12 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Stretch out thine hand over the land of Egypt for the locusts, that they may come up upon the land of Egypt, and eat every herb of the land, even all that the hail hath left.

13 And Moses stretched forth his rod over the land of Egypt, and the LORD brought an east wind upon the land all that day, and all that night; and when it was morning, the east wind brought the locusts.

14 And the locusts went up over all the land of Egypt, and rested in all the coasts of Egypt: very grievous were they; before them there were no such locusts as they, neither after them shall be such.

15 For they covered the face of the whole earth, so that the land was darkened; and they did eat every herb of the land, and all the fruit of the trees which the hail had left: and there remained not any green thing in the trees, or in the herbs of the field, through all the land of Egypt.

16 ¶ Then Pharaoh called for Moses and Aaron in haste; and he said, I have sinned against the LORD your God, and against you.

17 Now therefore forgive, I pray thee, my sin only this once, and entreat the LORD your God, that he may take away from me this death only.

18 And he went out from Pharaoh, and entreated the LORD.

19 And the LORD turned a mighty strong west wind, which took away the locusts, and cast them into the Red sea; there remained not one locust in all the coasts of Egypt.

some evil purpose in mind.ⁿ 11 No! Go, the men among you, and serve the LORD, for that is what you desire." And they were driven out from Pharaoh's presence.

12 Then the LORD said to Moses, "Stretch out your hand over the land of Egypt for the locusts, that they may come upon the land of Egypt, and eat every plant in the land, all that the hail has left." 13 So Moses stretched forth his rod over the land of Egypt, and the LORD brought an east wind upon the land all that day and all that night; and when it was morning the east wind had brought the locusts. 14 And the locusts came up over all the land of Egypt, and settled on the whole country of Egypt, such a dense swarm of locusts as had never been before, nor ever shall be again. 15 For they covered the face of the whole land, so that the land was darkened, and they ate all the plants in the land and all the fruit of the trees which the hail had left; not a green thing remained, neither tree nor plant of the field, through all the land of Egypt. 16 Then Pharaoh called Moses and Aaron in haste, and said, "I have sinned against the LORD your God, and against you. 17 Now therefore, forgive my sin, I pray you, only this once, and entreat the LORD your God only to remove this death from me." 18 So he went out from Pharaoh, and entreated the LORD. 19 And the LORD turned a very strong west wind, which lifted the locusts and drove them into the Red Sea; not a single locust was left in all the

ⁿ Heb before your face to let the men go; if worship in its outer forms were the sole object, that would suffice (23:17; 34:23). What Pharaoh cannot see is that the God of Israel, who is the Lord of all the earth, must wholly possess those who worship him. Their possessions too belong to him.

13. The sirocco wind from the Arabian Desert carries the locusts. This natural explanation corresponds to the facts.

16-17. Pharaoh called Moses and Aaron in haste: He has increasingly ceased to rely on his own divine status in times of trouble. At such times he tries to make use of God to carry him through to better times.

20 But the LORD hardened Pharaoh's heart, so that he would not let the children of Israel go.

21 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Stretch out thine hand toward heaven, that there may be darkness over the land of Egypt, even darkness which may be felt.

22 And Moses stretched forth his hand toward heaven; and there was a thick darkness in all the land of Egypt three days:

23 They saw not one another, neither rose any from his place for three days: but all the children of Israel had light in their dwellings.

24 ¶ And Pharaoh called unto Moses, and said, Go ye, serve the LORD; only let your flocks and your herds be stayed: let your little ones also go with you.

country of Egypt. 20 But the LORD hardened Pharaoh's heart, and he did not let the children of Israel go.

21 Then the LORD said to Moses, "Stretch out your hand toward heaven that there may be darkness over the land of Egypt, a darkness to be felt." 22 So Moses stretched out his hand toward heaven, and there was thick darkness in all the land of Egypt three days; 23 they did not see one another, nor did any rise from his place for three days; but all the people of Israel had light where they dwelt. 24 Then Pharaoh called Moses, and said, "Go, serve the LORD; your children also may go with you; only let your flocks 24-26. This interview takes up where the one preceding the plague (vss. 7-11) left off. Pharaoh will now let the women and children go but wants to hold the cattle as a pledge of the people's return. In the spirit of Israel's theocracy Moses says, in effect, that all the cattle belong to the Lord (cf. Ps. 50:10). His objection that only upon arrival at the place of sacrifice will they know what is wanted is not just a ruse; it is also, and more significantly, an explication of what it means to be the people of God. In Israel all of life is held in trust under a single trusteeship. The God of Israel is one Lord.

28-29. Now that the comprehensive and absolutist character implied in the formula Let my people go has been stated, the negotiations are at an end. Pharaoh threatens to slay Moses. He can tolerate a partial allegiance such as was implicit in his concessions hitherto, but he will not deny himself or his own understanding of himself. Moses, in anticipation, answers for Israel the question Elijah was to ask centuries later (I Kings 18:21). He trusts Yahweh absolutely now. His reply, I will not see your face again, is not just the close of a conference; it is the foundation of monotheism and of freedom (cf. Josh. 24:14-24).

9. DARKNESS (10:21-23, 27)

This brief account by E is at present augmented by a section from J (vss. 24-26, 28-29) which, as suggested above, may originally have formed a part of the preceding plague.

21. Perhaps while holding the rod Moses is to stretch out [his] hand toward heaven to bring about the plague (cf. vs. 12). The phrase a darkness to be felt rests on an uncertain Hebrew text. The Syriac renders it, "and the darkness will become dark." Whatever its precise meaning, the statement intends to convey the notion of an awesome darkness, perhaps one in which the spirits of darkness, always dreaded in Egypt, are dangerously active.

22-23. The thick darkness which falls is, lit., "a darkness of darkness," a complete gloom making movement impossible. Only in the dwellings of Israel was there light.

as many as they can. "Good and fat," they cry as they bring in their catch for a feast.

21-29. The Darkness.—The story here differs from the other stories. There are no divine instructions, no interview with Pharaoh. Very early in the study of the text, even when the Greek translation of the Hebrew was made, this darkness was connected with khamsin, the wind that blows in the spring and brings with it clouds of sand and dust, darkening the sun. For a poetical description of it (for the Egyptians this terror would be the more frightful because 25 And Moses said, Thou must give us also sacrifices and burnt offerings, that we may sacrifice unto the LORD our God.

26 Our cattle also shall go with us; there shall not a hoof be left behind; for thereof must we take to serve the LORD our God; and we know not with what we must serve the LORD, until we come thither.

27 ¶ But the LORD hardened Pharaoh's heart, and he would not let them go.

28 And Pharaoh said unto him, Get thee from me, take heed to thyself, see my face no more; for in that day thou seest my face thou shalt die.

29 And Moses said, Thou hast spoken well, I will see thy face again no more.

11 And the LORD said unto Moses, Yet 11 will I bring one plague more upon Pharaoh, and upon Egypt; afterward he will let you go hence: when he shall let you and your herds remain behind." 25 But Moses said, "You must also let us have sacrifices and burnt offerings, that we may sacrifice to the LORD our God. 26 Our cattle also must go with us; not a hoof shall be left behind, for we must take of them to serve the LORD our God, and we do not know with what we must serve the LORD until we arrive there." 27 But the LORD hardened Pharaoh's heart, and he would not let them go. 28 Then Pharaoh said to him, "Get away from me; take heed to yourself; never see my face again; for in the day you see my face you shall die." 29 Moses said, "As you say! I will not see your face again."

11 The LORD said to Moses, "Yet one plague more I will bring upon Phar-

Since E does not refer to Goshen as a separate area for Israelites, the exemption must be limited to the individual homes.

24-26, 28-29. See Exeg. on vss. 24-26, 28-29, p. 910.

10. DEATH OF THE FIRST-BORN ANNOUNCED (11:1-10)

Vss. 1-3 (E) are a continuation of 10:27 and consist mainly in a repetition of God's command to Israel to take booty from the Egyptians. Vss. 4-8 (J) must be read as the conclusion of the last interview of Moses with Pharaoh (10:29), the announcement of the death of the first-born being God's answer to Pharaoh's threat on Moses' life. The concluding-verses are by P.

11:1-3. The final plague is entirely God's work. Moses need only instruct Israel that the end is near and tell them what to do. In complete defeat Pharaoh will actually they believed that evil spirits were abroad in the darkness), see Wisd. Sol. 17:1-18:4: "For well did the Egyptians deserve to be deprived of light and imprisoned by darkness; they who had kept in close ward thy sons, through whom the incorruptible light of the law was to be given to the race of men" (18:4).

11:1-12:30. Death.—In every home in Egypt at midnight the eldest son dies, from the heir apparent in the king's palace to the son of the wretched felon in the cell (12:29); the poor maid sitting grinding corn behind the hand mill loses her boy too (11:5). As in Matt. 2:18, there was "a voice heard, lamentation, and weeping, and great mourning, Rachel weeping for her children, and would not be comforted, because they are not." It was a night of horror: Pharaoh rose up, he, and all his servants, and all the Egyptians; and there was a great cry in Egypt: for there was not a house where there was not one dead (12:30). Then Moses was sent for and, without conditions, was granted everything he had asked. The wonderful picture he had painted for the people's imagination by his faith in Yahweh (11:8) had actually come true. Everything was done to get the now unwelcome guests out of Egypt as soon as possible. Costly gifts were pressed upon them, if only they would leave at once; for the Egyptians were urgent upon the people, to send them out of the land in haste. In spite of the story in 12:1-20, we find the writer here represents the people as absolutely unprepared for the sudden realization of all their hopes. They were not ready for a journey. They had to take the dough (which they had set out in the evening for bread) before it was leavened; and on the way they had to bake matzoth, unleavened cakes. So we have seen the strokes of Yahweh strike like lightning, each bolt more terrifying than the last. We have held our breath each time to see if Pharaoh will not yield to the inevitable. Now at last, long after his advisers had seen his case was hopeless, Pharaoh capitulated. The great duel between go, he shall surely thrust you out hence altogether.

aoh and upon Egypt; afterwards he will let you go hence; when he lets you go, he will welcome the departure of Israel and seek its expulsion. We are led to believe that the "underground" in Egypt had become a majority.

Pharaoh and Moses was over, and Moses had won. Pharaoh had everything—armies of soldiers, cities filled with treasure, a rich land; Moses had nothing but a disorganized gang of slaves—and Yahweh—on his side. But it is better to have nothing and God on one's side than to have everything except God.

In spite of all the tragedy in Egypt, it was a great day for the lonely man who had communed with his God in solitary prayer, who had had to go on in spite of the discontent and murmuring of his own people, who had seen one attempt after another fail, who had at times even doubted if God had treated him fairly. One is reminded of the words of Woodrow Wilson, who knew all about the loneliness of leadership, at the dedication in 1916 of the memorial built over the log cabin birthplace in Hodgenville, Kentucky, the Lincoln home:

It was a very lonely spirit that looked out from underneath those shaggy brows and comprehended men without fully communing with them, as if, in spite of all its genial efforts at comradeship, it dwelt apart, saw its visions of duty where no man looked on. There is a very holy and very terrible isolation for the conscience of every man who seeks to read the destiny in affairs for others as well as for himself, for a nation as well as for individuals. That privacy no man can intrude upon. That lonely search of the spirit for the right perhaps no man can assist.¹

But one has also to remember the interview which Lincoln had on September 13, 1862, with a group of clergymen urging immediate and universal emancipation. Lincoln said:

I am approached with the most opposite opinions and advice, and that by religious men, who are equally certain that they represent the Divine will. . . . I hope it will not be irreverent for me to say that, if it is probable that God would reveal his will to others on a point so connected with my duty, it might be supposed He would reveal it directly to me; for, unless I am more deceived in myself than I often am, it is my earnest desire to know the will of Providence in this matter. And if I can learn what it is, I will do it! These are not, however, the days of miracles, and I suppose it will be granted that I am not to expect a direct revelation. I must study the plain physical facts of the case, ascertain what is possible, and learn what appears to be wise and right. The subject is difficult, and good men do not agree.²

¹ The Public Papers of Woodrow Wilson, ed. Ray S. Baker and William E. Dodd (New York: Harper & Bros., 1926), II, 295.

Lincoln was speaking against the background of the ideas of revelation of his day. We believe that God's best revelations come in the course of that study and learning of which he speaks in his last sentences. Inspiration does not come to the slothful soul but is the miraculous "more" that is added to the best one can do. Beethoven says:

You ask me where I get my ideas. That I cannot tell you with certainty. They come unsummoned, directly, indirectly—I could seize them with my hands—out in the open air, in the woods, while walking, in the silence of the nights, at dawn, excited by moods which are translated by the poet into words, by me into tones that sound and roar and storm about me till I have set them down in notes.³

Being inspired is hard work. Inspiration is not an isolated phenomenon to be found only in the specific sphere of religion. It is very closely related to inspiration in all the creative arts. When Virgil, in Dante's Inferno, silences objections to the possibility of certain achievements with this hell-conquering formula, "Thus it is willed in that place where what is willed can be done; ask no more," he is as near as human language can come to expressing the secret of inspiration. Fontane gives us a secular expression of the same mystery:

The first dawn of the idea comes of itself; working it out and getting it right afterwards means much toil. Yet the old story that one becomes just the mouthpiece of a higher power has some truth in it; and the sense of being so inspired leaves one with but two emotions: those of humility and thanksgiving.⁴

For the religious leader of today, it is well to remember the secret toil which is the price of public leadership. Maledictus est qui facit opus Dei negligenter, which, being put into a figure, means "A study that is a lounge makes a pulpit that is an impertinence."

² John T. Morse, Jr., Abraham Lincoln (Boston: Houghton, Mifflin Co., 1893), II, 110.

³ J. Lindsay, Inspiration (London: Fanfrolico Press, 1928), p. 88.

⁴ Conrad Wandrey, Theodor Fontane (München: C. H. Beck, 1919), p. 267.

2 Speak now in the ears of the people, and let every man borrow of his neighbor, and every woman of her neighbor, jewels of silver, and jewels of gold.

3 And the LORD gave the people favor in the sight of the Egyptians. Moreover, the man Moses was very great in the land of Egypt, in the sight of Pharaoh's servants, and in the sight of the people.

4 And Moses said, Thus saith the LORD, About midnight will I go out into the midst of Egypt:

drive you away completely. 2 Speak now in the hearing of the people, that they ask, every man of his neighbor and every woman of her neighbor, jewelry of silver and of gold." 3 And the LORD gave the people favor in the sight of the Egyptians. Moreover, the man Moses was very great in the land of Egypt, in the sight of Pharaoh's servants and in the sight of the people.

4 And Moses said, "Thus says the LORD: About midnight I will go forth in the midst

4. In response to Pharaoh's threat (10:29) Moses tells him, in God's name, that Yahweh will go through Egypt as the angel of death. Each night, according to Egyptian mythology, the sun fought and overcame the snake, Apophis, who symbolized the hostile darkness. As a god, Pharaoh was the incarnation of the sun, and the hostile darkness was his enemy also. The force of Moses' announcement is that the night is at hand when this customary victory, on which the autonomous existence of Egypt depends, will not take place (H. and H. A. Frankfort, in Intellectual Adventure of Ancient Man, p. 24).

2. Reparations.—As promised in 3:21-22, the people are not to "go empty." However the word is translated—borrow, ask, or "ask as a loan"—it seems to be implied that ostensibly the loan is for the three days' absence at the religious festival. Whether the neighbors ever expected to see their things returned or not, the fact seems to be that in the midst of the epidemic they were willing to give anything to get rid of the unwelcome guests. Jewish writers have justified the action in various ways. "She rendered unto holy men a reward for their toils" (Wisd. Sol. 10:17). "They plundered the Egyptians to make up for the years of slavery into which they had been forced" (Jubilees 48:18). One writer suggests that they had to leave their houses and much which they would be unable to move on so short notice and that these things would recoup the Egyptians for their loss of jewelry.

The question of reparations for injuries done by one race to another in time of war has always been a difficult question to solve honestly. The method these people took certainly saved a great deal of time lost in endless reparation conferences! The attempt to exact reparations in accordance with the principle of chs. 21-22 has never been very successful, as the Roman general in G. B. Shaw's play Caesar and Cleopatra indicates, "I do not try to think things out. I only act from instinct." Most attempts at reparation are instinctive reactions which reduce the injured to the moral level of the injurer; a reading of this play and Androcles and the Lion will give one the other side of the case from that usually maintained by the disciples of that great idol, abstract justice.

4. The Cost of Folly and Sin.—The original and oldest account of the last plague as told by J (vs. 4-8; 12:29-39) should be read by itself, as various interpolations have been inserted into it. Some scholars think that the whole story of the last plague was invented to account for the custom of slaying the first-born lamb at the Passover feast. But it seems more likely that there was some historical basis for this last terror. Egypt was notorious as a land of pestilences and epidemics, and one can well believe that the Hebrews escaped during one of these visitations. The epidemic happened to occur during the Passover feast, and was therefore looked upon as punishment sent by Yahweh for the neglect of the sacrifice he had ordained in the wilderness of Sinai. The key of the situation is that because Pharaoh did not spare the first-born of Yahweh (Israel), Yahweh did not spare the first-born of Egypt, even Pharaoh's eldest son (4:23).

Symbolically, the last plague illustrates the historic curse of war. The first-born in all races were considered the choicest and best, whether among man or beast. War destroys the cream of every race engaged in it—the boldest, bravest, most self-sacrificing young men. Any biography of any great man born about the time that made him eligible to partake in World War I is proof of this truth. Read such a book as John Buchan's Pilgrim's Way,⁵ and see in his chapter on Oxford what happened to the most brilliant men of his youth. Over and over again, after glowing eulogies of incipient greatness, comes a sentence such as, "When our troops advanced

⁵ Boston: Houghton Mifflin Co., 1940, pp. 65, 60, 50.

5 And all the firstborn in the land of Egypt shall die, from the firstborn of Pharaoh that sitteth upon his throne, even unto the firstborn of the maidservant that is behind the mill; and all the firstborn of beasts.

6 And there shall be a great cry throughout all the land of Egypt, such as there was none like it, nor shall be like it any more.

7 But against any of the children of Israel shall not a dog move his tongue, against man or beast: that ye may know how that the LORD doth put a difference between the Egyptians and Israel.

of Egypt; 5 and all the first-born in the land of Egypt shall die, from the first-born of Pharaoh who sits upon his throne, even to the first-born of the maidservant who is behind the mill; and all the first-born of the cattle. 6 And there shall be a great cry throughout all the land of Egypt, such as there has never been, nor ever shall be again. 7 But against any of the people of Israel, either man or beast, not a dog shall growl; that you may know that the LORD makes a distinction between the Egyptians

5. The death of the first-born therefore symbolizes God's defeat of Egypt through the conquest of its gods. In Israelite thought the first-born represent the whole. The dominion of Egypt as an independent entity is at an end. Its gods are dead.

6. The great cry is indeed unique, for it is the cry of idols and idolaters at the Last Judgment. The writer sees the historical Exodus as an illustration of the eschatological victory of Yahweh. The Lord reigns (Ps. 97:1).

7-8. In the midst of this upheaval those who belong to the living God are safe, for it is he who is taking possession of the whole earth. No one shall even think of to victory in the autumn of 1918, they found his grave," or "But on the fifteenth that fatal fire from the corner of Ginchy village brought death to many in the gallant division, and among them was Raymond Asquith. . . . One gift only was withheld from him—length of years." A visitor to Russia tells how he inquired concerning one outstanding genius after another whom he had met in the interval between the wars, and received always the same answer, "Killed in the war." War would be far from being such a curse if international law permitted only those over sixty-five to engage in it. But the embarkation parade would not be so impressive. "The last plague" which robs us periodically of the coming leaders of the next generation, and leaves us with the politicians only, can never come to an end, the Bible teaches us, unless after a tremendous upheaval men dare to escape out of this bondage which is slavery to what they call instinct.

The story of the last plague, reflecting attitudes toward Egypt like those found in Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel, illustrates the hatred felt by Israel for the Egyptians, due partly to the national tradition of enslavement by the hated foreigner and partly to the religious intolerance which was one of the Semitic characteristics transmitted in some measure to Christianity. The first step toward religious and international unity must be to remove from each group the notion that nothing but its own theory is correct. No pious pretense can be a substitute for that.

When Fénelon and Bossuet had said every mean thing they could think about each other, they were apt to announce publicly that they were praying for each other's conversion. Perhaps one of the brightest signs of the times is the growth of a new spirit in the missionary enterprise which is not concerned with the "nothing-but-our-way" conception, but realizes that the religion of the East has much to teach the religion of the West; and that John Locke, who formulated the underlying philosophy of the American Constitution, may have something to learn even from Karl Marx, while at the same time the West has much to teach the East, and the Western democracies much to add to and correct in the Russian ideology. Impatience with another's viewpoint is a barren sentiment. Lily Langtry, when asked about history, is reported to have said that she felt it was better to let bygones be bygones. The same thing is true of ancient wrongs. Sir Horace Plunkett said, "The history of England's attempted domination of Ireland is for Englishmen to remember and for Irishmen to forget."

Of course Pharaoh had his point of view, and till recently it is conceivable that supreme courts would have upheld it as legal. Apparently he had acquired his property by due process of conquest. Moses proposed to rob him of it. At this early stage in history the same problem is presented as when a foreign government of our time proposes to cancel leases held in their land by our citizens, in order to better the condition

8 And all these thy servants shall come down unto me, and bow down themselves unto me, saying, Get thee out, and all the people that follow thee: and after that I will go out. And he went out from Pharaoh in a great anger.

9 And the LORD said unto Moses, Pharaoh shall not hearken unto you; that my wonders may be multiplied in the land of Egypt.

10 And Moses and Aaron did all these wonders before Pharaoh: and the LORD hardened Pharaoh's heart, so that he would not let the children of Israel go out of his land.

12 And the LORD spake unto Moses and Aaron in the land of Egypt, saying,

2 This month shall be unto you the beginning of months: it shall be the first month of the year to you.

and Israel. 8 And all these your servants shall come down to me, and bow down to me, saying, 'Get you out, and all the people who follow you.' And after that I will go out." And he went out from Pharaoh in hot anger. 9 Then the LORD said to Moses, "Pharaoh will not listen to you; that my wonders may be multiplied in the land of Egypt."

10 Moses and Aaron did all these wonders before Pharaoh; and the LORD hardened Pharaoh's heart, and he did not let the people of Israel go out of his land.

12 The LORD said to Moses and Aaron in the land of Egypt, 2 "This month shall be for you the beginning of months; it shall be the first month of the year for harming them. Even the court of Pharaoh will acknowledge the lordship of Yahweh and bow before his people. Moses leaves in hot anger. One is reminded of the direction given the apostles with respect to the towns that did not heed their message (Matt. 10:14; Luke 9:5). The action of God in signs and powers has reached its climax. He will now take possession of Israel.

B. YAHWEH TAKES POSSESSION OF ISRAEL (12:1-13:16)

Before the final blow falls in the dramatic conflict between Yahweh and the powers of Egypt there occurs, as it were, an interruption. The narrators introduce a series of laws covering three of Israel's socio-cultic observances. Each of these three rites—Passover, Unleavened Bread, and the Dedication of the First-Born—are said to derive their meaning from the event that is about to take place. In all probability the history of all three rites goes back to a time before the Exodus, whether among the Hebrews or among other groups. But in Israel, in all the biblical accounts, they attain a new meaning. All three commemorate the exodus revelation. They all attest that Israel belongs to Yahweh because of his redemptive action at the Exodus.

The primitive meaning of these rites differed greatly from the significance they acquired in the context of the exodus faith. In each case the alteration in meaning was more radical and rapid than the change in phenomenological form. Consequently, aided by a recovered knowledge of the general religious and cultural history of the ancient Near East, it is possible up to a point to reconstruct the nature and meaning of these rites in their pre-Mosaic setting by studying the phenomena that clung to them after they became testimonies to the Exodus. Further, it is also clear, and for our purposes even more significant, that these observances continued to alter, both in form and meaning, even after they had become festivals of Yahweh. The variety of laws and descriptions for each rite, provided by successive schools or periods, is actually a record of this continuous alteration in the midst of which the rites continue to attest the redeeming power of Yahweh in the exodus event. Thus literary and historical criticism provides us not only with a truer factual account of tradition, but simultaneously shows the role of tradition in relation to faith in the Bible itself.

A long period may have intervened between the Exodus and the production of even the oldest extant regulation for some or all of these rites. The process of recasting the form and content of each rite never ceased. In adapting the forms to Israel's faith by 3 ¶ Speak ye unto all the congregation of Israel, saying, In the tenth day of this month they shall take to them every man a lamb, according to the house of their fathers, a lamb for a house:

you. 3 Tell all the congregation of Israel that on the tenth day of this month they shall take every man a lamb according to their fathers' houses, a lamb for a house-

"purifying" the meaning, the prophetic leadership in Israel was normally ahead of general practice. Whatever pagan echoes may have continued to cling to them, it can be assumed that each of these three rites was kept in honor of the God of the Exodus long before the laws we now have about it were written down. This seems especially true in the case of Passover. We cannot rule out the possibility that Moses himself instituted it as Israel's feast in honor of the event of deliverance.

Since both here and in Deut. 15:19-16:8 the laws of these rites are published as a single block, some conclude that two or all three of them are different aspects of one basic rite which maintained itself from the beginning. Thus Beer says that "Passover is the feast of the offering of the first born" (Exodus, p. 71). Deuteronomy, indeed, offers real support for the view that attempts were made to make a single observance out of the three. It integrates Passover and Unleavened Bread and makes the Passover victim and the first-born appear as identical sacrifice. But this may not have been true from the first. Nor did the Deuteronomists' attempt to integrate them succeed any more completely than their concern to concentrate the observances wholly in Jerusalem. Neither originally nor ultimately was Passover just the sacrifice that Deuteronomy makes of it. If it had been, it could not well have survived until today. Here the contiguous location of the laws for the three rites is simply due to the fact that all three commemorate the Exodus.

1. PASSOVER (12:1-14, 43-49 [P])

12:1. The prescriptions of P for the observance of Passover are introduced with the standard priestly formula, that God revealed his will also in this matter to Moses and Aaron.

2. Passover takes place in the spring. It is here said to occur in the first month of the year. Before the Babylonian exile Israel's year began in the autumn (34:22). In exile Israel began to conform to the Babylonian custom of beginning the year in the spring. In older accounts the month of Passover and Unleavened Bread is Abib, month of growing ears (13:4; 23:15; 34:18; Deut. 16:1). In the time of this writer it was known by the Babylonian name Nisan (Esth. 3:7). P is here concerned to stress the lasting significance of the Exodus celebrated by the Passover; it ushers in a new age.

3. The Passover is a family observance and the lamb is its central feature. In Deuteronomy the family character of the feast had disappeared, and instead of the lamb of their own nationals. In its most general form the problem is whether wealth is essentially social and therefore subject in all points to control in the interests of society as a whole. Pharaoh insisted on his legal rights in his own property. Moses contended for the common good of society as a whole. Today he would raise the question as to whether or not an economic system which produces unemployment, slums, and poverty can be justified by the property rights inherent in the system of individual enterprise. In recent years we have at least dared to experiment with methods for alleviating some of the scandals of our system. Pharaoh would have justified himself by pointing to the great public buildings, the high standard of living in Egypt under his administration, and the comparatively low cost of construction now that the state was no longer under the necessity of providing straw for the bricks; while Moses would have pointed with his magic staff to the epidemics, flies, lice, decaying fish, and frogs, about which nothing was done, and to the shameful condition of the workers' homes. This controversy goes on today.

In front, the sun climbs slow, how slowly,
But westward, look, the land is bright.⁶

12:3-27. The Meaning of the Passover.—The whole section about the institution of the Pass-

⁶ Arthur Hugh Clough, "Say Not, the Struggle Nought Availleth."

there was an offering from "the flock or the herd" (Deut. 16:1-8). The Deuteronomic effort to change Passover into a temple sacrifice was at least partly successful and continued as long as the temple stood (Ezek. 45:21-25; Lev. 23:5; Ezra 6:19-20; Jubilees 49; II Chr. 30; 35:1-19). Nevertheless, as the character of the documents emphasizing it indicates, this effort remained to a large degree an ideal prescription rather than an actual realization. Since it was never fully transformed into a temple sacrifice Passover could continue when Jerusalem and the temple were lost. The provisions of the P writer, while ostensibly designed only for the first Passover in Egypt as opposed to all later observances, "the Passover of the generations" (Pesahim 9:5), seem to imply that the family character of the feast, with the lamb as its feature, was still a fact in his day. In speaking of the congregation of Israel, . . . according to their fathers' houses, he is, to be sure, influenced by the organization of society among the returned exiles in Jerusalem.

over is composed of annotated and supplemented narrative and laws from J and P. There are repetitions and inconsistencies, and the story of the actual Exodus is confused by the introduction into the narrative of these laws. The theory of the editor is that all laws as to the first-born, the Passover, and the feast of Unleavened Bread, were given to Israel at the same time the people were departing from Egypt. The attempt to carry out this theory, which is not supported by other parts of the Pentateuch, leads to much necessary annotation (see Exeg. on 12:1-13:16).

A communal feast reminiscent of some great national deliverance, in the presence or in the company of God as participant, is an inspiring religious custom. Only a few nations have been able to carry out through the ages such a tradition. Western peoples have tried it over and over again, but have found that it degenerates soon into an individualistic and often vulgar holiday, without national or religious meaning. The Jews and some Oriental peoples have succeeded through centuries in preserving the national and religious significance of such festivals. The President of the United States still issues Thanksgiving proclamations, but a bird's-eye view of the country on Thanksgiving Day would not lead the observer to conclude that any national or religious festival was in progress. Open-air services at dawn on Easter morning are attempts to revive the idea of a religious festival, if they are not allowed to become theatrical shows. The Roman Catholic Church has been much more successful than the Protestant churches in perpetuating such religious festivals. Most citizens of Western countries suffer from a fear of making a show of themselves, and do not have as a matter of fact any aspirations or sentiments which they cannot adequately express in words. We have got far enough in our development as human beings to honor our spectacularly great men by processions and ticker tape, but the idea of thanksgiving to God for a great deliverance seems to most people to be a pious pose, participating in which would make them feel awkward. The Passover is a grand example of more mature national and religious thought and feeling, with its reminiscences of the story of the national past in unleavened bread, bitter herbs, and sacrifice, observed while the participants are dressed for a journey, shoes on their feet and a staff in their hands.

Much of the sentiment and feeling connected with it has passed into the Christian sacrament of the Holy Communion: it, too, should be a feast in the presence of God, filled with grateful remembrances of past deliverances by God. It should not be allowed to be emptied of its original meaning by theological obsessions or by ecclesiastical trappings, or by the modern inventions of silversmiths, glass and tinware merchants. If custom demands that these dominate the rite, there is something to be said for the Roman custom of a Communion breakfast following the rite, which will perpetuate more of the friendly, family feeling of the Passover. The participants are called upon to remember that they have had a past, filled with the mercies of God, that they owe much that is most precious in life to the sacrifice of others, that the flavor of life is in the mingling of the bitter and the sweet, and that they should not sit at their ease, but should be dressed and ready for the journey, the hard journey they have to make together with their friends and neighbors into the Promised Land where there will be milk and even some honey for all.

3-7. The Belief in Salvation by the Blood.— From the earliest records of primitive sacrifice man has been obsessed by the efficacy of innocent blood to save from disaster. Both the Roman Catholic and the Protestant churches have perpetuated this primitive tradition in all their ritual, in their hymns and sacred books. Realistically, shed blood is horrible beyond words; imaginatively, it has been used as a symbol of the omnipresence of sacrifice in human life. The scene when the priest carries the struggling little animal in his arms, takes it to the edge of the altar, or rock, or lintel, and

4 And if the household be too little for the lamb, let him and his neighbor next unto his house take it according to the number of the souls; every man according to his eating shall make your count for the lamb.

5 Your lamb shall be without blemish, a male of the first year: ye shall take it out from the sheep, or from the goats:

hold; 4 and if the household is too small for a lamb, then a man and his neighbor next to his house shall take according to the number of persons; according to what each can eat you shall make your count for the lamb. 5 Your lamb shall be without blemish, a male a year old; you shall take it from the

According to the Mishnah the requirement to select the lamb on the tenth day, as well as the sprinkling of blood on the doorposts and the hasty consumption, applied only to the first observance (Pesachim 9:5). Such provisions must perhaps be interpreted as efforts at reform or justifications of disuse, in this instance probably the former.

4. According to Josephus ten was the minimum number for a household (Jewish War VI. 9. 3), the number required to this day for the organization of a Jewish congregation. Whenever two "households" had to use the same room scrupulous care was taken in their separation; they were seated with their backs to one another.

5. The lamb must be "perfect" (cf. the P regulations governing sacrifices in Lev. 22:19-25). Burnt offerings also consisted of males. The provision that the lamb must be "the son of a year" is traditionally interpreted to mean that the lamb is in its first year, one of the current crop. As such it would be only a few weeks old at most. Most modern interpreters, backed by the LXX, take the view that the lamb was fully a year old, draws a knife across its throat, letting the jet of blood spurt from its throat and fall on the stains made by blood shed before—for "the colour of spilt blood is not properly a colour, it is in itself discoloured, it is a visible display of putrescence"⁷—the horror of the scene is forgotten because of the sense of the preciousness of the life that is offered for sin. Added to a subconscious delight in gore, there is also an ancient superstition that there is some magic efficacy in the murder of the innocent. Man's vileness is in essence cruelty, and it has been felt that only by cruelty can it be atoned for. Murdering goodness must be paid for by murdering goodness. The fact rather is that it is not possible to kill goodness: there is always more of it. In times of peace, writers of blood and gore have been popular, but every war has demonstrated that shed blood cannot be idealized. It is pure horror.

To Paul and Augustine, both men with cruel pasts, both men living among scenes of sacrificial cruelty, the slaying of the lamb could become the central picture of their faith. We are not as heroic figures as they, but we are more able to distinguish between the more and less noble elements in their imagery. We begin to see that the idea of suffering as the price for all good is only a splendid half-truth; that it is even nobler and often harder to live one's faith than to die for it; that a satisfactory theory of atonement for murder by murder can be reached only by sophisticated and theological ruses unacceptable to fair minds today. We need a new statement of Christian doctrine which will discard outworn imagery and concentrate upon the fact that religious truth cannot be expressed in even the most deftly chosen words, but only in the lives of humble folk; that a Christian philosophy of life or theology must savor less of excessively speculative otherworldliness and give more help in deciding what things are most worth while in daily life and how they may be attained. A genuine theology grows its own ritual. The man who was asked how his new car worked and answered, "I do not know; nothing has gone wrong with it yet," gives us the cue to much of the understanding of how our human minds work. We learn a great deal as to how healthy minds operate by studying morbid conditions. In the process of editing hymnals for use in hospitals for the insane, much of the usual material is found to savor too much of the morbid and unhealthy to make it possible to use as an instrument of mental healing.

Truth never wears out, but symbols do. The time has come when we can discard some of the imagery of blood which was entirely satisfactory to Paul and Augustine, as it was to Moses. There are already nobler methods of expressing the importance of sacrifice, and we can guard against evil in more rational ways than by painting our doorposts with the blood of innocent

⁷ Rebecca West, Black Lamb and Grey Falcon (New York: Viking Press, 1940), p. 823. For a vivid description of the ritual killing of a lamb see pp. 820-31.

6 And ye shall keep it up until the fourteenth day of the same month: and the whole assembly of the congregation of Israel shall kill it in the evening.

7 And they shall take of the blood, and strike it on the two side posts and on the upper doorpost of the houses, wherein they shall eat it.

sheep or from the goats; 6 and you shall keep it until the fourteenth day of this month, when the whole assembly of the congregation of Israel shall kill their lambs in the evening.^o 7 Then they shall take some of the blood, and put it on the two doorposts and the lintel of the houses in which belonging to the previous year's crop. It seems doubtful, however, that this was the original meaning of the phrase which among Semitic peoples to this day signifies one who is "in his first year." All of these cultic regulations applied to the Passover by P are conspicuously lacking in J's account (vss. 21-28).

^o Heb between the two evenings

6. The postexilic celebration of the Passover is again in the writer's mind as he presents a picture of the heads of "households" all gathered in a single place for the slaying. The Mishnah understands that three groups of families successively entered the temple court for the killing of the lambs. Hence the pleonasm: assembly, congregation, Israel. The heads of families killed the animals, and the priests formed a "bucket brigade" to catch the blood in basins and toss it against the base of the altar, in lieu of the ancient threshold ceremony (Pesahim 5:5-6). In Jewish orthodoxy the time of the slaughter, between the two evenings, is specified as in the afternoon, before sunset; especially, the time of approaching sunset. The Mishnah implies that any time after noon was valid for the slaying (Pesahim 5:3). Samaritans, Karaites, and Sadducees specify the time as after sunset and before darkness. The latter probably designates the more archaic practice.

7. A very ancient part of the rite is here recognized as a legitimate aspect of the first Passover. The P writer has modified J's account as to the manner in which the blood is to be applied to the doorposts and lintel (cf. vs. 22). The application of the blood to the threshold in all probability is an aspect of the Passover that antedates its observance by Israel in memory of the Exodus. Indeed, it is possible that this points to the originally central meaning of the rite, i.e., that it was a ceremony designed to appease the spirit of the threshold or, perhaps more likely, to protect the inhabitants of a lambs. For in the "fountain filled with blood" idea there is undoubtedly much of the mistakenly mystical justification and glorification of war.

The symbolism of shed blood is still very precious to many Christians, and will ever remain so in the Holy Supper, where its mysticism means participation in the very life of Jesus, his real presence in the daily life of the communicant. But in our days wholesale shedding of blood in war has actually been seen most horribly by too many of us. Its precious mystical meaning has been swallowed up in our common sense of guilt that such things can be.

All early races have been persuaded that there was something mystically potent about blood. Most deaths in those days were violent deaths. Blood was the symbol both of life and of death. The disease germ of our time had not yet taken its place as the symbol of death in peacetime. It is a curious commentary on the infantilism of human nature that Christian ritual has centered so much on the momentary heroism of war rather than on the continuous heroism of peace, on dead blood, blood that has been shed, and has not been able to frame equally appealing symbols of live blood, blood throbbing in warm heroic life.⁸ Those who feel most at home with the blood of the martyrs today would have felt anything but comfortable with the living men. People seek to find their solace in tableaux of legal transactions imagined to have taken place in heaven. They fall back on arbitrary commands supposed to have been issued by God, which must be blindly obeyed, long after the reasons why such commands were supposed to have come from God have become invalid. We seem in much theological dogmatism to be overhearing the conversation between two infants in adjacent cribs: "It is so!" "It isn't so!" "Mother says it is so, and if mother says it is so, it is so, even if it isn't so!" A deeper, fairer, more accurate theology, founded on accepted scien-

⁸ For the hope of a religious ritual language really commensurate with our understanding of Christianity, see the later work of Paul Tillich, and Arnold J. Toynbee, Christianity and Civilization (Wallingford, Pa.: Pendle Hill, 1947), pp. 28, 32-34, 44.

8 And they shall eat the flesh in that night, roast with fire, and unleavened bread; and with bitter herbs they shall eat it.

9 Eat not of it raw, nor sodden at all with water, but roast with fire; his head with his legs, and with the purtenance thereof.

they eat them. 8 They shall eat the flesh that night, roasted; with unleavened bread and bitter herbs they shall eat it. 9 Do not eat any of it raw or boiled with water, but roasted, its head with its legs and its inner home or tent from attack by demons or spirits from without by barring their entrance. The lamb may well have been the symbol also of the bond that united the group protected by its blood, and thus it served as the sign of a covenant. The efforts to transform Passover into a priestly offering never really uprooted this communal quality. Originally the slaying of the lamb seems to have taken place on the threshold of the door to which the blood was applied (cf. vs. 22).

8. The roasting of the lamb is emphasized in the later period. The ordinance in Deut. 16:7 seems to prescribe boiling rather than roasting (cf. I Sam. 2:13). In the earliest periods the lamb was very probably consumed raw. The frequent prohibitions of blood and raw meat in Israel's legislation seem to point to an earlier use of both. According to the Mishnah, the lamb was roasted on a skewer of pomegranate wood thrust through the carcass from end to end (Pesahim 7:1). Metal skewers or grills were prohibited. The bitter herbs, symbolic of Israel's bitter suffering (Pesahim 10:5), could, according to the Mishnah, consist of lettuce, chicory, peppermint, snakeroot, or dandelion (Pesahim 2:6). When eaten, these were dipped into a sauce (harôseth) of pounded nuts and fruit sprinkled with vinegar. This sauce was not accepted as obligatory by all (Pesahim 10:3). While in the biblical accounts the bitter herbs commemorated the hardness of bondage in Egypt, the original significance must have been something very different. Beer feels that this was originally a separate pre-Israelite rite which, like Passover, was assimilated to Israel's faith (Exodus, p. 65). It is the intention of P to distinguish Passover from Unleavened Bread as separate observances. Nevertheless, even where this was true, the removal of all leaven from homes had to be completed on the fourteenth day of the month, usually by noon (cf. Num. 28:16-17).

9. There were long and inconclusive debates in later Judaism as to whether the legs were to be folded inside the carcass while the lamb was being roasted, or left on the outside.

tific facts and on the highest human aspirations, may grow out of that common, humble silence around the grave of the unknown soldier, and bring with it its own ritual for the inspiration of all; for this experience speaks to all of every creed of the deep mystery of religion, of "God . . . the great companion—the fellow-sufferer who understands." 9 In all this imagery of blood man has been feeling after a true picture of death as the fulfillment of life. Great and princely death in each man's life is the fruit around which all else is flower and leaf; our dying is a part of and grows out of our living. Dreaded by itself, death hangs anticipated in each man's life, green and without sweetness like an unripened fruit. But "ripeness is all"

⁹ A. N. Whitehead, Process and Reality (New York: The Macmillan Co., 1929), p. 532.

and when the moment comes, we find it the mellow consummation of a long process that has been continually maturing, that always has been dying to the old self in order to put on the new. "It is not death that kills but a more powerful life which, concealed behind the form of death, is bursting forth into a new phase of being."¹

8. Unleavened Bread.—Originally Matzoth, the feast of Unleavened Bread, was distinct from the Passover; the editor, however, has identified them and explains the absence of leaven as due to the haste of the departure. Leaven, in the opinion of all antiquity, represents a process of corruption and putrefaction in the mass of the dough. (Cf. its use in the N.T.; Matt. 16:6; Mark 8:15; Luke 12:1; I Cor. 5:6;

¹ See "The Vocation of Man," in The Popular Works of Johann Gottlieb Fichte, tr. William Smith (4th ed.; London: Trubner & Co., 1889), I, 321 ff.

10 And ye shall let nothing of it remain until the morning; and that which remaineth of it until the morning ye shall burn with fire.

11 ¶ And thus shall ye eat it; with your loins girded, your shoes on your feet, and your staff in your hand; and ye shall eat it in haste: it is the LORD's passover.

12 For I will pass through the land of Egypt this night, and will smite all the first-born in the land of Egypt, both man and beast; and against all the gods of Egypt I will execute judgment: I am the LORD.

13 And the blood shall be to you for a token upon the houses where ye are: and when I see the blood, I will pass over you, and the plague shall not be upon you to destroy you, when I smite the land of Egypt.

14 And this day shall be unto you for a memorial; and ye shall keep it a feast to the LORD throughout your generations: ye shall keep it a feast by an ordinance for ever.

parts. 10 And you shall let none of it remain until the morning, anything that remains until the morning you shall burn.

11 In this manner you shall eat it: your loins girded, your sandals on your feet, and your staff in your hand; and you shall eat it in haste. It is the LORD's passover. 12 For I will pass through the land of Egypt that night, and I will smite all the first-born in the land of Egypt, both man and beast; and on all the gods of Egypt I will execute judgments: I am the LORD. 13 The blood shall be a sign for you, upon the houses where you are; and when I see the blood, I will pass over you, and no plague shall fall upon you to destroy you, when I smite the land of Egypt.

14 "This day shall be for you a memorial day, and you shall keep it as a feast to the LORD; throughout your generations you shall observe it as an ordinance for ever.

10. The nocturnal nature of Passover is emphasized by the provision to burn any Passover meat that remained until morning (Isa. 30:29).

11. The people ate Passover as though outside. Staff and sandals are not taken indoors, nor does one indoors tie his long robe about his waist as when on the march. According to later tradition this eating in haste and fear applied only to the first Passover (Pesahim 9:5). The word "Passover" was probably a derivative of the verb meaning to limp or to leap (cf. II Sam. 4:4; I Kings 18:21, 26). But here it is clearly treated as a derivative from an identical root that means "to pass over." It refers to the passing by of Yahweh. To the P writer this signifies God's protection of the community. Originally, however, the emphasis was one in which the blood was a means of protecting one's group from some outside evil power.

12-13. The Passover was thus the sign of the covenant and of the people's safety under it. When in a "last judgment" Yahweh displayed his power over Egypt and over its gods (cf. 6:6; 7:4) by destroying them, Israel would be safe. The rite of the first-born in Israel sets forth its acknowledgment of God's rule while Passover celebrates Israel as the community of the covenant.

14. The memorial day seems to conclude the account of the Passover. But it is possible that the remainder of the verse really is a form of transition in which Passover and Unleavened Bread are associated together.

43-49. The supplementary laws of the Passover by P remind us strongly that in Israel social unity rested on the foundation of a common faith. A sign of this faith in P's day was circumcision. All that belongs to Israel, like Israel itself, belongs to Yahweh. Hence slaves are circumcised. But a foreigner can also voluntarily become a member of the community by conversion to Israel's faith. This conversion is made effective by circumcision and transcends whatever ethnic or other differences may exist; hence, one law for the native and for the stranger (vs. 49). The blessings of the Passover are for the children of the covenant.

The provision not to carry the Passover outside or break a bone of it is perhaps best understood as intended to uproot ancient superstitions. Originally bones were perhaps 15 Seven days shall ye eat unleavened bread; even the first day ye shall put away leaven out of your houses: for whosoever eateth leavened bread from the first day until the seventh day, that soul shall be cut off from Israel.

16 And in the first day there shall be a holy convocation, and in the seventh day there shall be a holy convocation to you; no manner of work shall be done in them, save that which every man must eat, that only may be done of you.

17 And ye shall observe the feast of unleavened bread; for in this selfsame day have I brought your armies out of the land of Egypt: therefore shall ye observe this day in your generations by an ordinance for ever.

18 ¶ In the first month, on the fourteenth day of the month at even, ye shall

15 Seven days you shall eat unleavened bread; on the first day you shall put away leaven out of your houses, for if any one eats what is leavened, from the first day until the seventh day, that person shall be cut off from Israel. 16 On the first day you shall hold a holy assembly, and on the seventh day a holy assembly; no work shall be done on those days; but what every one must eat, that only may be prepared by you. 17 And you shall observe the feast of unleavened bread, for on this very day I brought your hosts out of the land of Egypt: therefore you shall observe this day, throughout your generations, as an ordinance for ever. 18 In the first month, on the fourteenth broken to obtain the marrow. Bits of the meat and the marrow may have been used as magic means to insure fertility in field and flock or to insure against calamity. Hence P's prohibitions.

2. UNLEAVENED BREAD (12:15-20; 13:3-10)

15. Originally the feast of Unleavened Bread was a festival celebrated on the occasion of the barley harvest. As in the case of the other great festivals assimilated to Israel's faith, it was transformed from a nature festival to a historical feast, commemorating the historic event of Israel's deliverance by Yahweh. It became bound up with Passover. Walther Eichrodt suggests that when the two became known under one name, the term "Mazzoth" was used in the agricultural north and the term "Passover" in the pastoral south (Theologie des Alten Testaments [Berlin: Evangelische Verlagsanstalt, 1948], I, 52). That might explain why we have no reference to Passover in the E narrative. Here the feast is not separated by name from the Passover that precedes it. This does occur in Lev. 23:6. In Num. 28:17 we are told that it began on the fifteenth day of the month. Here the first day, on which leaven is removed, must mean the fourteenth (cf. vs. 18).

16. Thus the first day is in all likelihood the fifteenth, following the Passover night. There is to be rest from work except that, unlike on the sabbath, food may be prepared. On this and the seventh days burnt offerings in addition to those made daily were a central feature of the observance. The combination of the Unleavened Bread observance with Passover seems to have tended to make of the whole a more sacrificial rite.

Gal. 5:9; and in the Talmud, "Rabbi Alexander, when he had finished his prayers, said, 'Lord of the universe, it is clear to thee that it is our will to do thy will; what hinders that we do not thy will? The leaven which is in the dough!'" On the eve of the Passover Jewish households still scrupulously and joyfully search the house with lighted candle for any scrap of dough containing leaven; it must be burned before the feast. It is curious that Jesus uses it, however, as a figure of the slow growth of the kingdom (Matt. 13: 33). Phillips Brooks's famous sermon, "The Mystery of Iniquity," emphasizes the fact that badness seems to be a more contagious ferment than goodness, that a good little boy in a bad neighborhood is more likely to be depraved by his surroundings than to regenerate them. However, Jesus consciously used the very figure commonly employed to describe the contagious power of evil to illustrate the contagious power of good; but negative goodness does not so operate, as a comparison between the life of Jesus and the life of most of us, "good little boys," demonstrates.

eat unleavened bread, until the one and twentieth day of the month at even.

19 Seven days shall there be no leaven found in your houses: for whosoever eateth that which is leavened, even that soul shall be cut off from the congregation of Israel, whether he be a stranger, or born in the land.

20 Ye shall eat nothing leavened; in all your habitations shall ye eat unleavened bread.

21 ¶ Then Moses called for all the elders of Israel, and said unto them, Draw out and take you a lamb according to your families, and kill the passover.

22 And ye shall take a bunch of hyssop, and dip it in the blood that is in the basin, and strike the lintel and the two side posts with the blood that is in the basin; and none of you shall go out at the door of his house until the morning.

23 For the LORD will pass through to day of the month at evening, you shall eat unleavened bread, and so until the twenty-first day of the month at evening. 19 For seven days no leaven shall be found in your houses; for if any one eats what is leavened, that person shall be cut off from the congregation of Israel, whether he is a sojourner or a native of the land. 20 You shall eat nothing leavened; in all your dwellings you shall eat unleavened bread."

21 Then Moses called all the elders of Israel, and said to them, "Select lambs for yourselves according to your families, and kill the passover lamb. 22 Take a bunch of hyssop and dip it in the blood which is in the basin, and touch the lintel and the two doorposts with the blood which is in the basin; and none of you shall go out of the door of his house until the morning. 23 For 19-20. The prohibition of leaven was eventually to become the most scrupulously observed regulation. Careful search had to be made to see that all of it had been removed. One who did not conform was "cut off," i.e., excommunicated from the family of Israel. This meant, as Mekilta observes (ad loc.), that he ceased to exist, either for Israel or for God (Lev. 22:3).

13:3-10. A Deuteronomic editor, who identifies himself by means of characteristic phrases (vss. 5, 9), provides the law of Unleavened Bread with a homiletic supplement. He assumes (vs. 4) that Moses published the law on the very day of the departure (cf. 12:2-3). He calls the month of the Exodus by its pre-exilic name Abib (cf. 12:2). The observance of the rite is a sign, comparable to the wearing of phylacteries and the memorized Torah (vs. 9; cf. Deut. 6:4-9).

3. PASSOVER (12:21-28 [JJ])

21. Here, as elsewhere in J (4:29), Moses speaks to the elders. This account presupposes neither the postexilic organization of society nor the Deuteronomic and priestly laws about Passover, as do vss. 1-14.

22. The bunch of hyssop was also used in purification ceremonies (Lev. 14:4, 6; Num. 19:6, 18). It consisted of the foliage of the marjoram plant which grew in the clefts of walls and between stones (I Kings 4:33). Some magical powers may originally have been attributed to it. Analogous features occur in nearly all religions. The hyssop has its Christian continuation in the holy water sprinkled from the aspergillum or in that brush itself. In Hebrew the words for "basin" and "threshold" are the same. There is every reason to suppose that the latter is intended here. It is so understood in the LXX and in Mekilta (ad loc.), where it is pointed out that Rabbi Akiba dissociated himself from this common understanding. The lamb was slaughtered on the threshold and its blood spilled into a hollow place probably made for this very purpose. H. Oort reports on Armenian miniatures that depict the slaying in this manner ("Oud-Israëls Paascheest," Theologisch Tijdschrift, XLII [1908], 489-90).

23. The judgment upon Egypt is God's work, but his activity is personified as the destroyer. It is possible that the assimilation of pre-Israelite demonology under the aegis of the Lord's rule is reflected in the form of this account.

smite the Egyptians; and when he seeth the blood upon the lintel, and on the two side posts, the LORD will pass over the door, and will not suffer the destroyer to come in unto your houses to smite you.

24 And ye shall observe this thing for an ordinance to thee and to thy sons for ever.

25 And it shall come to pass, when ye be come to the land which the LORD will give you, according as he hath promised, that ye shall keep this service.

26 And it shall come to pass, when your children shall say unto you, What mean ye by this service?

27 That ye shall say, It is the sacrifice of the LORD's passover, who passed over the houses of the children of Israel in Egypt, when he smote the Egyptians, and delivered our houses. And the people bowed the head and worshipped.

28 And the children of Israel went away, and did as the LORD had commanded Moses and Aaron, so did they.

29 ¶ And it came to pass, that at midnight the LORD smote all the firstborn in the land of Egypt, from the firstborn of Pharaoh that sat on his throne unto the firstborn of the captive that was in the dungeon; and all the firstborn of cattle.

30 And Pharaoh rose up in the night, he, and all his servants, and all the Egyptians; and there was a great cry in Egypt: for there was not a house where there was not one dead.

31 ¶ And he called for Moses and Aaron by night, and said, Rise up, and get you forth from among my people, both ye and the LORD will pass through to slay the Egyptians; and when he sees the blood on the lintel and on the two doorposts, the LORD will pass over the door, and will not allow the destroyer to enter your houses to slay you. 24 You shall observe this rite as an ordinance for you and for your sons for ever. 25 And when you come to the land which the LORD will give you, as he has promised, you shall keep this service. 26 And when your children say to you, 'What do you mean by this service?' 27 you shall say, 'It is the sacrifice of the LORD's passover, for he passed over the houses of the people of Israel in Egypt, when he slew the Egyptians but spared our houses.' " And the people bowed their heads and worshipped.

28 Then the people of Israel went and did so; as the LORD had commanded Moses and Aaron, so they did.

29 At midnight the LORD smote all the first-born in the land of Egypt, from the first-born of Pharaoh who sat on his throne to the first-born of the captive who was in the dungeon, and all the first-born of the cattle. 30 And Pharaoh rose up in the night, he, and all his servants, and all the Egyptians; and there was a great cry in Egypt, for there was not a house where one was not dead. 31 And he summoned Moses and Aaron by night, and said, "Rise up, go forth

24-28. The statement that the people bowed their heads and worshipped (cf. 4:31) probably once concluded this brief J account. The remainder consists mostly of a didactic effort to make the people realize the importance of keeping the Passover in terms of its historic meaning for Israel. It has a Deuteronomic flavor.

4. DEATH OF EGYPT'S FIRST-BORN (12:29-32)

29-30. This account reports the fulfillment of the "last judgment" upon Egypt, as anticipated in 11:4-8. It follows immediately upon the account of the institution of the Passover, which, as vs. 27 implies and vs. 28 (P) makes explicit, was actually kept. The great cry of anguish (cf. 11:6) symbolizes the complete disintegration of human pride at the appearance of the day of wrath (cf. Isa. 2:12-22; Joel 2:6). Israel is safe by virtue of the covenant of God celebrated in Passover, under which it belongs to him.

31-32. According to J, Moses had vowed not to see Pharaoh again (10:29). This is another source of the story. Pharaoh begs Israel to leave, and thus the stubborn ruler recognizes the lordship of Yahweh.

the children of Israel; and go, serve the LORD, as ye have said.

32 Also take your flocks and your herds, as ye have said, and be gone; and bless me also.

33 And the Egyptians were urgent upon the people, that they might send them out of the land in haste; for they said, We be all dead men.

34 And the people took their dough before it was leavened, their kneadingtroughs being bound up in their clothes upon their shoulders.

35 And the children of Israel did according to the word of Moses; and they borrowed of the Egyptians jewels of silver, and jewels of gold, and raiment:

36 And the LORD gave the people favor in the sight of the Egyptians, so that they lent unto them such things as they required: and they spoiled the Egyptians.

37 ¶ And the children of Israel journeyed from Rameses to Succoth, about six hundred thousand on foot that were men, beside children.

from among my people, both you and the people of Israel; and go, serve the LORD, as you have said. 32 Take your flocks and your herds, as you have said, and be gone; and bless me also!"

33 And the Egyptians were urgent with the people, to send them out of the land in haste; for they said, "We are all dead men."

34 So the people took their dough before it was leavened, their kneading bowls being bound up in their mantles on their shoulders. 35 The people of Israel had also done as Moses told them, for they had asked of the Egyptians jewelry of silver and of gold, and clothing; 36 and the LORD had given the people favor in the sight of the Egyptians, so that they let them have what they asked. Thus they despoiled the Egyptians.

37 And the people of Israel journeyed from Ram'ses to Succoth, about six hundred thousand men on foot, besides women

5. SUDDEN DEPARTURE (12:33-36)

33. The Egyptians shared the attitude of Pharaoh at the victory of Yahweh. They urged the people to depart. Ca. 250 B.C. Manetho wrote a history in which he insisted that the ancestors of the Jews were so undesirable that they had been driven out of Egypt. A garbled account of this verse may have suggested his assertion.

34. This is an etiological note which explains the custom of eating unleavened bread in commemoration of the Exodus in a very natural and incidental manner. It did not rest on a divine command but came about as an incident of the sudden departure. The assumption is that the people had to leave long before daybreak: they had not mixed leaven in the dough from which they were to make bread in the morning. The explanation leaves Passover untouched by the custom. The suddenness of the departure is the beginning of the ever-recurrent theme in the Bible that God comes unexpectedly and that his people must always be ready.

35-36. The spoliation of the Egyptians (3:21-22; 11:2-3) is reported as having been carried out according to plan.

6. ISRAEL SETS OUT FROM EGYPT (12:37-42)

37. The slaves pulled up stakes. The first leg of their sudden journey from Rameses to Succoth crossed the much-traveled coastal road to Palestine (13:17). Tell-el-Maskhuta is the site of ancient Succoth. Just to the east lies Lake Timsah and north and south of it the marsh across which the Israelites made their way into Asia and freedom. The adult men "alone" numbered six hundred thousand. It is plausible that this impossible number rests on a numerical interpretation of the Hebrew letters in the phrase "sons of Israel" (cf. Beer, Exodus, p. 69). That the figure has no basis in fact is clear from almost every point of view. Such a large number could not have lived in Egypt or survived in the desert. Nor could they have found room in Canaan. The actual situation is intimated by 23:29-30; Judg. 5:8.

38 And a mixed multitude went up also with them; and flocks, and herds, even very much cattle.

39 And they baked unleavened cakes of the dough which they brought forth out of Egypt, for it was not leavened; because they were thrust out of Egypt, and could not tarry, neither had they prepared for themselves any victuals.

40 ¶ Now the sojourning of the children of Israel, who dwelt in Egypt, was four hundred and thirty years.

41 And it came to pass at the end of the four hundred and thirty years, even the selfsame day it came to pass, that all the hosts of the LORD went out from the land of Egypt.

42 It is a night to be much observed unto the LORD for bringing them out from the land of Egypt: this is that night of the LORD to be observed of all the children of Israel in their generations.

43 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses and Aaron, This is the ordinance of the passover: There shall no stranger eat thereof:

44 But every man's servant that is bought for money, when thou hast circumcised him, then shall he eat thereof.

45 A foreigner and a hired servant shall not eat thereof.

46 In one house shall it be eaten; thou shalt not carry forth aught of the flesh abroad out of the house; neither shall ye break a bone thereof.

47 All the congregation of Israel shall keep it.

48 And when a stranger shall sojourn with thee, and will keep the passover to the LORD, let all his males be circumcised, and then let him come near and keep it; and he shall be as one that is born in the land: for no uncircumcised person shall eat thereof.

49 One law shall be to him that is home-and children. 38 A mixed multitude also went up with them, and very many cattle, both flocks and herds. 39 And they baked unleavened cakes of the dough which they had brought out of Egypt, for it was not leavened, because they were thrust out of Egypt and could not tarry, neither had they prepared for themselves any provisions.

40 The time that the people of Israel dwelt in Egypt was four hundred and thirty years. 41 And at the end of four hundred and thirty years, on that very day, all the hosts of the LORD went out from the land of Egypt. 42 It was a night of watching by the LORD, to bring them out of the land of Egypt; so this same night is a night of watching kept to the LORD by all the people of Israel throughout their generations.

43 And the LORD said to Moses and Aaron, "This is the ordinance of the passover: no foreigner shall eat of it; 44 but every slave that is bought for money may eat of it after you have circumcised him. 45 No sojourner or hired servant may eat of it. 46 In one house shall it be eaten; you shall not carry forth any of the flesh outside the house; and you shall not break a bone of it. 47 All the congregation of Israel shall keep it. 48 And when a stranger shall sojourn with you and would keep the passover to the LORD, let all his males be circumcised, then he may come near and keep it; he shall be as a native of the land. But no uncircumcised person shall eat of it. 49 There shall

38. If the mixed multitude is to be understood historically it most probably consisted of non-Israelite Semitic elements in Egypt.

39. One is left with the impression that not until they reached Succoth, about twenty-five miles away, did the fugitives stop to bake the unleavened dough (vs. 34).

40-42. The four hundred and thirty years compares with four hundred in Gen. 15:13 (cf. Acts 7:6; Gal. 3:17). The LXX here adds the phrase "and in Canaan," possibly to harmonize the discrepancy. This was the night of Israel's birth. Yahweh stood guard to protect it. Therefore Israel must guard the memory of this night. The reference is to the observance of Passover.

43-49. See Exeg. on vs. 43-49, pp. 921-22.

born, and unto the stranger that sojourneth among you.

50 Thus did all the children of Israel; as the LORD commanded Moses and Aaron, so did they.

51 And it came to pass the selfsame day, that the LORD did bring the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt by their armies.

13 And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

2 Sanctify unto me all the firstborn, whatsoever openeth the womb among the children of Israel, both of man and of beast: it is mine.

3 ¶ And Moses said unto the people, Remember this day, in which ye came out from Egypt, out of the house of bondage; for by strength of hand the LORD brought you out from this place: there shall no leavened bread be eaten.

4 This day came ye out in the month Abib.

5 ¶ And it shall be when the LORD shall bring thee into the land of the Canaanites, and the Hittites, and the Amorites, and the Hivites, and the Jebusites, which he swore unto thy fathers to give thee, a land flowing with milk and honey, that thou shalt keep this service in this month.

6 Seven days thou shalt eat unleavened bread, and in the seventh day shall be a feast to the LORD.

7 Unleavened bread shall be eaten seven days; and there shall no leavened bread be seen with thee, neither shall there be leaven seen with thee in all thy quarters.

8 ¶ And thou shalt show thy son in that day, saying, This is done because of that be one law for the native and for the stranger who sojourns among you."

50 Thus did all the people of Israel; as the LORD commanded Moses and Aaron, so they did. 51 And on that very day the LORD brought the people of Israel out of the land of Egypt by their hosts.

13 The LORD said to Moses, 2 "Consecrate to me all the first-born; whatever is the first to open the womb among the people of Israel, both of man and of beast, is mine."

3 And Moses said to the people, "Remember this day, in which you came out from Egypt, out of the house of bondage, for by strength of hand the LORD brought you out from this place; no leavened bread shall be eaten. 4 This day you are to go forth, in the month of Abib. 5 And when the LORD brings you into the land of the Canaanites, the Hittites, the Amorites, the Hivites, and the Jeb'usites, which he swore to your fathers to give you, a land flowing with milk and honey, you shall keep this service in this month. 6 Seven days you shall eat unleavened bread, and on the seventh day there shall be a feast to the LORD. 7 Unleavened bread shall be eaten for seven days; no leavened bread shall be seen with you, and no leaven shall be seen with you in all your territory. 8 And you shall tell your

7. DEDICATION OF FIRST-BORN (13:1-2, 11-16)

13:1-2. This is a summary statement by P of the law of the first-born. More complete statements of this law, as P understands it, are found in Num. 3:11-13, 40-51; 18:15-16. The rite's central meaning is that Israel and its possessions belong to God. Its institution was associated with the death of the first-born in Egypt, but it seems more probable that, whatever calamity may be the historical basis of that story, the present form of it owes much to God's customary claim of Israel's first-born. The P writer taught that at Sinai the Levites became the possession of God in lieu of all the first-born of Israel a month old and more, except that the number of Levites was not sufficient to cover all (Num. 3:40-51). The remainder were redeemed for five shekels of silver each (ca. three dollars). This also was the redemption fine, at the age of one month, of all the subsequent first-born. In 22:29b-30 (E) the redemption takes place on the eighth day.

3-10. See Exeg. on 13:3-10, p. 923.

which the LORD did unto me when I came forth out of Egypt.

9 And it shall be for a sign unto thee upon thine hand, and for a memorial between thine eyes, that the LORD's law may be in thy mouth: for with a strong hand hath the LORD brought thee out of Egypt.

10 Thou shalt therefore keep this ordinance in his season from year to year.

11 ¶ And it shall be when the LORD shall bring thee into the land of the Canaanites, as he sware unto thee and to thy fathers, and shall give it thee, 12 That thou shalt set apart unto the LORD all that openeth the matrix, and every firstling that cometh of a beast which thou hast; the male shall be the LORD's.

13 And every firstling of an ass thou shalt redeem with a lamb; and if thou wilt not redeem it, then thou shalt break his neck: and all the firstborn of man among thy children shalt thou redeem.

14 ¶ And it shall be when thy son asketh thee in time to come, saying, What is this? that thou shalt say unto him, By strength of hand the LORD brought us out from Egypt, from the house of bondage:

15 And it came to pass, when Pharaoh would hardly let us go, that the LORD slew all the firstborn in the land of Egypt, both the firstborn of man, and the firstborn of beast: therefore I sacrifice to the LORD all that openeth the matrix, being males; but all the firstborn of my children I redeem.

son on that day, 'It is because of what the LORD did for me when I came out of Egypt.'

9 And it shall be to you as a sign on your hand and as a memorial between your eyes, that the law of the LORD may be in your mouth; for with a strong hand the LORD has brought you out of Egypt. 10 You shall therefore keep this ordinance at its appointed time from year to year.

11 "And when the LORD brings you into the land of the Canaanites, as he swore to you and your fathers, and shall give it to you, 12 you shall set apart to the LORD all that first opens the womb. All the firstlings of your cattle that are males shall be the LORD's. 13 Every firstling of an ass you shall redeem with a lamb, or if you will not redeem it you shall break its neck. Every first-born of man among your sons you shall redeem. 14 And when in time to come your son asks you, 'What does this mean?' you shall say to him, 'By strength of hand the LORD brought us out of Egypt, from the house of bondage. 15 For when Pharaoh stubbornly refused to let us go, the LORD slew all the first-born in the land of Egypt, both the first-born of man and the first-born of cattle. Therefore I sacrifice to the LORD all the males that first open the womb; but 11-16. The same Deuteronomic editor who supplied the homiletic supplement (vss. 3-10) for the feast of Unleavened Bread seems to have provided this one for the law of the dedication of the first-born. He qualifies the basic requirement by stipulating that the first-born males of animals only are to be handed over. He quotes a provision of J (34:20) relating to the donkey and to the redemption of man. It is intimated that the redemption of Israel's sons is founded on the death of the first-born in Egypt (vs. 15).

13:1-10. See Expos. of 12:8.

14-16. Sign or Substance?—The tokens of remembrance commanded in vs. 16 were a metaphorical way of saying, "You must keep these things in mind." But that would be difficult to do; it would be much easier to carry out the injunction literally, as was done. Two leather capsules were each fastened to a band, one so tied that it was over the heart, the other between the eyebrows. In these were written certain words of the law (vs. 16; see Deut. 6:4-9; 11:13-21). Jesus refers to them in Matt. 23:5 as examples of the way men love external acts of worship and the vain display of piety while neglecting the spiritual discipline of which they were intended to be a symbol.

The custom arose in antiquity from the desire to ward off evil spirits, and frontlets were habitually worn by many ancient tribes for this purpose. As missionaries have found, it is a sound practice to turn an ancient superstitious custom to a good use instead of trying fruitlessly to forbid it. Albert Schweitzer tells that, when asked to give a newborn baby its taboo, he

16 And it shall be for a token upon thine hand, and for frontlets between thine eyes: for by strength of hand the LORD brought us forth out of Egypt.

17 ¶ And it came to pass, when Pharaoh had let the people go, that God led them not through the way of the land of the Philistines, although that was near; for God said, Lest peradventure the people repent when they see war, and they return to Egypt:

all the first-born of my sons I redeem.' 16 It shall be as a mark on your hand or frontlets between your eyes; for by a strong hand the LORD brought us out of Egypt."

17 When Pharaoh let the people go, God did not lead them by way of the land of the Philistines, although that was near; for God said, "Lest the people repent when

C. YAHWEH'S VICTORY EMANCIPATES ISRAEL (13:17-15:21)

1. FROM SUCCOTH TO ETHAM (13:17-22)

17. God leads Israel by a way of his own choosing, a way that differs from the accustomed route of man's caravans and armies. But he does so for reasons that have a basis in natural processes; in this case the reasons are psychological and strategic. The people must not change their mind because of unexpected difficulties. In Israel's solemnly pronounced the words to the African mother, "He must never touch alcohol."

All religious emotion tends to use metaphor, and prosaic people will always afterward try to interpret the metaphor literally; so we have sectarianism and theological controversy. A flag is a symbol, but it is much easier to wave it than to suffer and fight for the ideals for which it stands. Thus the people of Moses' day, instead of keeping these things in mind, put them in capsules, tied them around their necks, and so felt pious.

Much patriotism and much piety remind one of Lewis Carroll's lines:

"I weep for you," the Walrus said:
"I deeply sympathize."

With sobs and tears he sorted out
Those of the largest size, Holding his pocket-handkerchief
Before his streaming eyes.²

17-22. The Leading of God.—As is usual in Exodus, the editor has combined a number of varying accounts of the adventure, but the occurrence has impressed itself on the human mind as one of the great symbolic scenes of humanity. Sir Walter Raleigh says:

Orusius, in his first book and tenth chapter against the Pagans, tells us, that in his time, who lived some four hundred years after Christ, the prints of Pharaoh's chariot wheels were to be seen at a low water on the Egyptian sands; and though they were some time defaced by wind and weather, yet soon after they appeared again. But hereof I leave every man to his own belief.³

² Through the Looking-Glass, ch. iv.

³ History of the World, Bk. II, ch. iii, sec. 9.

The hurrying feet of a liberated people, the outstretched rod of the great leader, the banked-up seas at either side, the prints of dragging chariot wheels, the enemy corpses floating on the returning flood—no wind and weather can fully efface the image of these events from the sands of human history. They have been comfort and inspiration to all ages. When in 1776 the mistreated colonies in America took their courage in their hands and resolved to burn their bridges behind them and declare their independence, they faced tremendous perils. Franklin suggested for the reverse of the official seal of the United States:

Pharaoh sitting in an open chariot, a crown on his head and a sword in his hand, passing through the divided waters of the Red Sea in pursuit of the Israelites. Rays from a pillar of fire in the cloud, expressive of the Divine presence and command, beaming on Moses, who stands on the shore and, extending his hand over the sea, causes it to overflow Pharaoh. Motto: "Rebellion to Tyrants is obedience to God."⁴

And no one can read the life of Lincoln, in a later stage of American history, without being struck again and again by resemblances to the life of Moses. "Up from Slavery" would have been a good title for the book of Exodus. Lincoln, like Moses, was a man of humble birth, the son of a poor woman. Both men were trained in the knowledge of the laws of the land. Both men were struck by the horror of slavery in a dramatic instance of its cruelty: the one in Egypt, when Moses spied an Egyptian taskmaster

⁴ Carl Van Doren, Benjamin Franklin (New York: Viking Press, 1938), p. 553.

18 But God led the people about, through the way of the wilderness of the Red sea: and the children of Israel went up harnessed out of the land of Egypt.

they see war, and return to Egypt." 18 But God led the people round by the way of the wilderness toward the Red Sea. And the people of Israel went up out of the land of deliverance, and throughout, the Bible reports Israel's history as the record of God's leadership. This is the central tenet, the correlation of which, with its affirmation of human responsibility and the realities in the processes of nature and history, is the key to the Bible's interpretation of existence. The land of the Philistines was first occupied by Philistines ca. 1175 B.C., after the Exodus. Clearly the Israelites did not travel on the coastal highway. Beer (Exodus, p. 75), adopting a view of Eissfeldt, thinks that Lake Sirbonis, on the Mediterranean side of that highway, was the scene of the Egyptian disaster. The view rests mainly on the attempt to locate the places Pi-ha-hiroth, Migdol, and Baal-zephon (14:2, 9) at Lake Sirbonis. Unless this attempt succeeds beyond dispute the general theory will not gain wide acceptance, for most of the other biblical evidence, including this paragraph, militates against it.

18. For his people God chose the way of the wilderness, i.e., the way via the Sea of Reeds. This sea was in all probability the marshy area north or south of Lake Timsah, across which this way led into Asia. The term Red Sea rests on the LXX and indicates smiting a Hebrew; the other in New Orleans, when Lincoln saw a mulatto girl put up to auction. Both men delivered a race from slavery, the one by ten terrible plagues, the other by a still more terrible war in which many of the first-born all over the land were slain. The signing of the Emancipation Proclamation was the crossing of the Red Sea into a new land of promise and opportunity, even if miles of wilderness had to be crossed first. Both men died just as they came to stand on the peak of Pisgah, looking out afar at the dim outlines of the Promised Land they themselves were not permitted to enter. Both men lived and died that they might give to a whole race the "bread of heaven," which is freedom.

In his story of the crossing of the Red Sea by a people fleeing hazardously through this dividing line from the dictatorship and tyranny of Pharaoh to seek for liberty, the writer seems to say, as Philippe de Coulanges said to an excited audience, "Do not imagine you are listening to me; it is history itself that speaks." For it is the faith of good men that progress in the direction of organized and assured freedom is the hand of God in human history. There always have been many, and there are many still, who do not share this faith, who hold that greater things are done for man by power concentrated than by power balanced and dispersed, and that to imagine that the ruler derives his power from the people is rebellion against the divine will all down the stream of time, that our business is to preserve, not to improve. One hears advanced today under many guises the ideas that precautions against abuses obstruct progress, that enlightened virtue is dethroned for the benefit of the ignorant mob, placing the capable at the mercy of the incapable. Indeed, the children of Israel, with all their rebellions and murmurings and errors in the forty years of the wilderness wanderings, learned all about the graduality of the process of attaining freedom. Just as one cannot learn to think all at once, but has to come to it gradually, so freedom of the will is not born overnight, but has to be progressively achieved. There are certain indications by which one can test the presence of the leaven of freedom in the body politic, e.g., the adequacy of the checks held by the people upon the action of their rulers or managers in political life and business affairs; the extinction of slavery; the security of weaker groups; the power of public opinion; the availability of facts on all questions; liberty of conscience. Israel fell down badly in such tests, as its subsequent history shows, just as the Pilgrims did when they were free to erect their own state in Plymouth; but in both cases the leaven of freedom was working, for the experiment of free government is not one which can be tried once for all. Every generation must try it for itself. As each generation grows up to manhood it has to launch afresh its ship of liberty on its experimental voyage. Apostles of freedom will also do well to remember the pertinent remark of Artemus Ward: "I believe we are descended from the Puritans, who nobly fled from a land of despotism to a land of freedom, where they 19 And Moses took the bones of Joseph with him: for he had straitly sworn the children of Israel, saying, God will surely visit you; and ye shall carry up my bones away hence with you.

20 ¶ And they took their journey from Succoth, and encamped in Etham, in the edge of the wilderness.

21 And the LORD went before them by day in a pillar of a cloud, to lead them the way; and by night in a pillar of fire, to give them light; to go by day and night.

22 He took not away the pillar of the cloud by day, nor the pillar of fire by night, from before the people.

Egypt equipped for battle. 19 And Moses took the bones of Joseph with him; for Joseph had solemnly sworn the people of Israel, saying, "God will visit you; then you must carry my bones with you from here."

20 And they moved on from Succoth, and encamped at Etham, on the edge of the wilderness. 21 And the LORD went before them by day in a pillar of cloud to lead them along the way, and by night in a pillar of fire to give them light, that they might travel by day and by night; 22 the pillar of cloud by day and the pillar of fire by night did not depart from before the people.

the sea we know by that name, also the Indian Ocean. It seems best here not to think of a wilderness in Egypt, as most interpreters do, but the wilderness to which the route leads, i.e., "the wilderness of Shur" (15:22; Num. 33:8), or more probably the right fork of the route leading toward the wilderness of Paran. The statement that Israel marched out equipped for battle rests on a term which sometimes means armed for war. The Hebrew word is probably the plural of the number five; thus, by fives or fifties. This also helps account for the LXX reading "in the fifth generation" (cf. 6:14-27).

19. The departure is again reported to have been anticipated by Joseph (Gen. 50:24-25) and the patriarchs. In the Bible God visits his people either in judgment or in redemption. The latter is assumed here.

20. Etham was apparently just across the Sea of Reeds from the wilderness of Shur or Etham (15:22; Num. 33:8).

21-22. The pillar of cloud and the pillar of fire set forth in mythical language the statement of vs. 17 that God led Israel. These are symbols of the divine presence. We must not so much think of them as religious adaptations of natural phenomena as of an experience of the divine presence set forth in images which may in part be derived from natural scenes.

could not only enjoy their own religion but prevent everybody else from enjoying his." ⁶

19. The Bones of Joseph.—(See Gen. 50:25; Josh. 24:32.) The king of Egypt may not remember the great figure of the past (1:8), but the Hebrew people can never forget. One pictures the mummified figure of Joseph, borne on the shoulders of the new generation, going back to his "boyhood's home," to be buried near the well of Jacob, his father, and the sacred oak (Gen. 35:4).

20-22. The Pillar of Cloud and the Pillar of Fire.—This designation, which is an accurate description of a volcano, has led some to see in the tidal flood in the Red Sea and in the experiences at Sinai ancient memories of volcanic disturbances taking place at the time of the Exodus. Hugo Gressmann adduces several experiences with volcanic eruptions which coincide with the descriptions of the pillars of cloud and fire, of the flames of Sinai, and of the recession of the sea and its sudden return, as so eloquently pictured in the Song of Miriam. The similarity of the phenomena described, and the possibility that Mount Sinai was near the sea, leave the reader free to indulge his imagination on the matter as he will. Actually, these things took place so long ago that it is impossible now to be certain whether the tidal wave, the cloud of fire, and the burning mountain were originally religious symbols or literally volcanic fact (but see Exeg.). ⁶ Certain it is that to primitive man no material phenomenon seemed to be so plainly divine as fire. This is seen in the flaming sword at the gate of paradise, in the sacrificial fire on the altar, in the burning bush, and in the refiner's fire (Isa. 48:10; Mal. 3:2). ⁷

⁶ See further Hugo Gressmann, Die Anfänge Israels (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1922; "Die Schriften des Alten Testaments in Auswahl"), pp. 55-56.

⁷ See Homer Iliad V. 1-5 et passim.

⁶ From the fifth of his letters in Punch, published in 1866.

14 And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

2 Speak unto the children of Israel, that they turn and encamp before Pi-hahiroth, between Migdol and the sea, over against Baal-zephon: before it shall ye encamp by the sea.

3 For Pharaoh will say of the children of Israel, They are entangled in the land, the wilderness hath shut them in.

4 And I will harden Pharaoh's heart, that he shall follow after them; and I will be honored upon Pharaoh, and upon all his host; that the Egyptians may know that I am the LORD. And they did so.

14 Then the LORD said to Moses, 2 "Tell the people of Israel to turn back and encamp in front of Pi-ha-hi'roth, between Migdol and the sea, in front of Ba'al-zephon; you shall encamp over against it, by the sea. 3 For Pharaoh will say of the people of Israel, 'They are entangled in the land; the wilderness has shut them in.' 4 And I will harden Pharaoh's heart, and he will pursue them and I will get glory over Pharaoh and all his host; and the Egyptians shall know that I am the LORD." And they did so.

2. CRISIS AT THE FRONTIER (14:1-14)

14:1-2. At the Lord's command Moses tells Israel to turn back and encamp by the sea. From where? By what sea? From Succoth-Etham up toward Lake Sirbonis on the Mediterranean Sea, says Eissfeldt, recalling that Israel had come down from Rameses. No, say more conventional interpreters, from north of Lake Timsah, where an attempt to cross may have failed (Wright and Filson, Westminster Atlas, p. 38b), back to its Egyptian or western shore.

3-4. There is no support in the text for the view that the return was occasioned by defeat. The writer accounts for the order by describing it as a ruse that would evoke an attack by Pharaoh's troops, an attack calculated to fail. That the Egyptians took the chance is, for the writer, another instance of the blindness of Pharaoh who could still

14:1-9. Pharaoh's Returning Fury.—The plagues were gone. There were no more flies or frogs than usual at this time of the year. The weather was bright and sunny, children well, flocks flourishing. "What fools we were to let our property go! Who is to finish building our grand treasure cities? There are rumors in the papers that Egyptian citizens will have to be sent to the brickyards to work like slaves. There was probably, after all, nothing in the idea that Yahweh was responsible for the plagues that happened to crowd in upon us. It would not surprise us if in after ages some scholar should discover that they were all due to perfectly natural causes; and anyway, the gods of Egypt are more powerful than the god of a gang of illiterate slaves. It was our hysterical bureaucrats who got us into this mess. Our Pharaoh was ill-advised by that crowd at the palace. We must have our slaves back if Egypt is to take her place among the great powers. What is our army for? There were six hundred chosen chariots in the last parade. And we know more about the country than they do; they must be entangled in the land; the wilderness must have shut them in. It will be easy to surround the mob and bring them back." So might it have been said in Egypt; and Pharaoh's heart was hardened again. It had gone through that process so many times that it must have become pretty hard by then. He did not need much persuading. The repentance of a scared man is worth very little. When "the Devil was sick,—the Devil a monk would be."⁸ In Boston a prison superintendent led a visitor around the "tombs," the cells in which the night's prisoners are confined, awaiting the opening of the morning court. It was "the morning after," before the opening of the court. Through almost every barred gate hands were thrust to seize the superintendent's sleeve with the words, "If you get me off this time, I promise to God that I'll never be here again!" It was the fourth, fifth, and in one case the tenth, appearance behind those same bars. In the same way in every modern war it is possible to cheer those going into battle with the slogan "A war to end war"; men in great depressions resolve to mend their ways, as we all remember. But Prov. 26:11 tells the whole story with horrible truth. Real repentance is not the resolve that if you do not catch it this time you will never do it again, that if the plagues let up you will be good. For you will not be able to preserve your present mood when you are tempted next time, any more than Pharaoh was.

⁸ Rabelais, Works, Bk. IV, ch. xxiv.

5 ¶ And it was told the king of Egypt that the people fled: and the heart of Pharaoh and of his servants was turned against the people, and they said, Why have we done this, that we have let Israel go from serving us?

6 And he made ready his chariot, and took his people with him:

7 And he took six hundred chosen chariots, and all the chariots of Egypt, and captains over every one of them.

8 And the LORD hardened the heart of Pharaoh king of Egypt, and he pursued after the children of Israel: and the children of Israel went out with a high hand.

9 But the Egyptians pursued after them, all the horses and chariots of Pharaoh, and his horsemen, and his army, and overtook them encamping by the sea, beside Pi-hahiroth, before Baal-zephon.

5 When the king of Egypt was told that the people had fled, the mind of Pharaoh and his servants was changed toward the people, and they said, "What is this we have done, that we have let Israel go from serving us?" 6 So he made ready his chariot and took his army with him, 7 and took six hundred picked chariots and all the other chariots of Egypt with officers over all of them. 8 And the LORD hardened the heart of Pharaoh king of Egypt and he pursued the people of Israel as they went forth defiantly. 9 The Egyptians pursued them, all Pharaoh's horses and chariots and his horsemen and his army, and overtook them encamped at the sea, by Pi-ha-hi'roth, in front of Ba'al-zephon.

not see that his real protagonist was Yahweh. The success of Israel's strategy, as interpreted by faith, provided Yahweh with an occasion to clinch his victory over Pharaoh and set Israel free. Beer and Eissfeldt rightly stress the calculated strategy involved in the movement.

5. The text assumes that the pursuit was organized at the court. It may be, however, that the incident was the result of independent action taken by troops stationed at some frontier fort. The first half of the verse implies an escape without permit, while the last half seems to imply just the opposite.

6. The LXX says specifically that it was Pharaoh who prepared his chariot and such is the meaning.

7. Officers rests on a Hebrew word meaning "third" or "three." Our term "crew" may describe the intention of the writer. Actually Egyptians manned chariots with only two men, the driver and the fighter. (In later times the Israelites, following Assyrian and Hittite custom, had a crew of three for each chariot, including also an armor-bearer.)

8. The statement of the RSV that the Israelites went out defiantly is an interpretation of the Hebrew idiom, בִּיר רָמָה, rendered with a high hand in the KJV. It seems best to translate "by means of a high hand," meaning the hand or powerful act of God. The people were under God's protection (cf. vs. 31; 3:19; 6:1).

9-12. When Pharaoh approached panic shook the people. They cried out to the LORD in fear rather than in faith. Here begins a series of scenes in which the firm faith of Reading articles and books on repentance, one is struck with the difficulty of distinguishing between a Pharaoh willing to let the people go because he is afraid of more plagues and a Pharaoh who has really repented of his tyrannical cruelty in the depths of his being and could be addressed in the language of the Book of Common Prayer: "Ye who do truly and earnestly repent you of your sins, and are in love and charity with your neighbours, and intend to lead a new life, following the commandments of God, and walking from henceforth in his holy ways." J. Ellis McTaggart suggests that one can test oneself to see if one is only in a scared mood, or really repenting, by noting one's changed attitude toward God. The scared man has the feelings of a mouse toward a cat; the repentant, the feelings of a child toward its father. J. G. Fichte, in his latest stage, describes real repentance this way: "The inclinations which I have to sacrifice are not really my inclinations, but are enemies within the camp plotting against my real self." Paul puts it in a similar way, "It is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me" (Rom. 7:17). One other test of real repentance is that

10 ¶ And when Pharaoh drew nigh, the children of Israel lifted up their eyes, and, behold, the Egyptians marched after them; and they were sore afraid: and the children of Israel cried out unto the LORD.

11 And they said unto Moses, Because there were no graves in Egypt, hast thou taken us away to die in the wilderness? wherefore hast thou dealt thus with us, to carry us forth out of Egypt?

12 Is not this the word that we did tell thee in Egypt, saying, Let us alone, that we may serve the Egyptians? For it had been better for us to serve the Egyptians, than that we should die in the wilderness.

10 When Pharaoh drew near, the people of Israel lifted up their eyes, and behold, the Egyptians were marching after them; and they were in great fear. And the people of Israel cried out to the LORD; 11 and they said to Moses, "Is it because there are no graves in Egypt that you have taken us away to die in the wilderness? What have you done to us, in bringing us out of Egypt? 12 Is not this what we said to you in Egypt, 'Let us alone and let us serve the Egyptians'? For it would have been better for us to serve the Egyptians than to die in the Moses is contrasted with the vacillation of his people (16:3; 17:3; Num. 11:4-5; 14:3; 16:13; 20:3-4; 21:5). It should be noted that the prophet Jeremiah (2:1-3) conspicuously dissociated himself from the tradition of murmuring and rebellion in the desert. But even though it is assumed that this series of accounts rests on historical fact we may find in them some echoes of the religious struggle which took place between prophets and people from the days of Elijah and onward.

the repentant man stands ready for any remedial task, however great, for any service, however distasteful. Repentance is the first sign of the operation of the law of growth within you, and this law is more potent than that of cause and effect. It is the interest of God in you, and as Meister Eckhart says, "Man goes far away or near, but God never goes far off; he is always standing close at hand, and even if he cannot get within he goes no further away than the door."*

10-12. The Weakness of Human Nature.—Taking into account all that Moses had done for them, all he had had to go through, and the courage and resourcefulness he had shown, what the people said now was downright mean. It is true that with the sea in front of them and Pharaoh's hosts behind them they were frightened, but they had been frightened before, and Moses, under the guidance of Yahweh, had brought them through in safety. Where was their faith now?

Everyone sooner or later meets with similarly mean remarks about himself and his work. How should one act in such cases? The natural reaction is extreme indignation and assumed astonishment that anyone could say such things. In fact some people go through life in a continual state of astonishment that other people are not archangels. Every cowardly act or sweet gossipy slander leaves them speechless with apoplectic resentment. "Did you hear what they said, what they have done?" And bloodshot eyes seek in one's face answering astonishment. What can one say? The calm answer, "Yes, that is the way people are," seems not to be sympathetic enough for the occasion; yet it is all that one can say in cases of plain meanness like this. There would be no problem, no great challenge in life, if people were all saints. Read Kipling's poem "If." It is important that Moses should not descend to their level and begin to argue that they never had said in Egypt that which they now said they had (vs. 12). Probably the farthest he went was vs. 14, which seems to mean, "You will stop talking like that when you see what is going to happen." No, Moses apparently said to himself, "That is the way people are. They are scared, poor folk. They need a little encouragement." So he said not one word in self-defense or recrimination but, omitting to notice their personal remarks, went on with the business in hand: Fear ye not, stand still, and see the salvation of the LORD. Until you have met real injustice in life, you cannot tell whether you are a man or a mouse. The mouse gets all worked up; the man ignores the personal slander and goes on to do the best he can for his folk. Moses was a man. "And there arose certain, and bare false witness against him, saying, We heard him say, I will destroy this temple. . . . And the high priest stood up in the midst, and asked Jesus, saying, Answerest thou nothing? . . . But he held his peace, and answered nothing" (Mark 14:57-58, 60-61).

* Pfeiffer, Meister Eckhart, II, 23.

13 ¶ And Moses said unto the people, Fear ye not, stand still, and see the salvation of the LORD, which he will show to you today: for the Egyptians whom ye have seen to-day, ye shall see them again no more for ever.

14 The LORD shall fight for you, and ye shall hold your peace.

15 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Wherefore criest thou unto me? speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward:

wilderness." 13 And Moses said to the people, "Fear not, stand firm, and see the salvation of the LORD, which he will work for you today; for the Egyptians whom you see today, you shall never see again. 14 The LORD will fight for you, and you have only to be still." 15 The LORD said to Moses, "Why do you cry to me? Tell the people of 13-14. In the crisis Moses issues orders: Fear not, stand firm, and see. Salvation does not effect the same result for men in every part of the Bible, but throughout God reveals himself as a savior. Salvation does not rest finally on the ethical value men have discerned as implicit in the working of God, but on his power of redemption. The Samar. text and Targ. seem sufficient warrant for changing whom to "as." The real point is not that these Egyptians are about to perish in the flood but rather that this is an eschatological event. The historic victory of God will establish his lordship beyond dispute. Egyptians will never again contend with Yahweh "as" they are doing now. God will establish his rule. Let men be silent. Moses does not just ask Israel to stop complaining; he proclaims here the transcendence of God.

3. ISRAEL CROSSES THE SEA (14:15-22)

The crossing was an event which lay wholly within the nexus of nature and history as these are scientifically understood. But for Israel this was God's "time" (John 7:8), and became a revelatory event which compelled those who saw it to reinterpret the meaning of both nature and history. It was the redemptive event which became the foundation of Israel's existence as the people of God. It was for Israel not simply a source of objective meaning, but also of abiding wonder (Buber, Moses, pp. 75-76). The event is for the O.T. what Jesus as Christ is for the N.T.—the normative redeeming and revealing act of God.

13-18. God's Answer to Man's Extremity.— In one of his critical days Abraham Lincoln wrote, "Whatever He designs, He will do for me yet. 'Stand still and see the Salvation of the Lord' is my text just now."¹⁰ The best commentary on vs. 15 is that of George Meredith, "The soul's one road is forward."

When one is convinced that he is upon God's errand, how far can he expect natural forces to obey his will? Two religious answers have been given to this question. Through all history there have been some saints who have believed that under God's inspiration they are at times enabled to overcome and change nature's course; and in all ages there have been those who believe that no exceptions are made for the best or the worst, even in the most critical emergencies, that the laws of nature must be taken by the saint and the sinner as constant. "Do good to them that hate you, . . . that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven: for he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust" (Matt. 5:44-45). Dwight D. Eisenhower, commander in chief of the Allied forces in the Normandy landings, issued to his men a noble call for D-Day: "The free men of the world are marching together to victory. . . . Good luck and let us all beseech the blessing of Almighty God upon this great and noble undertaking."¹¹ Never before in history were so many men so confident of the divine leadership. Yet just before June 5, the original D-Day, the worst June gale in forty years suddenly struck along the Channel, sweeping away the laborious preparations of many months' toil. When the landing hour came, two unpredictable things combined to make the situation critical. One was the weather, which swamped the boats, concealed the obstacles, and made the infantry sick; the other seemed to the Allies a stroke of the worst luck, for the

¹⁰ Bryan Binns, Abraham Lincoln (New York: E. P. Dutton & Co., 1907), p. 77.

¹¹ H. S. Commager, The Story of the Second World War (Boston: Little, Brown & Co., 1945), p. 411.

16 But lift thou up thy rod, and stretch out thine hand over the sea, and divide it: and the children of Israel shall go on dry ground through the midst of the sea.

Israel to go forward. 16 Lift up your rod, and stretch out your hand over the sea and divide it, that the people of Israel may

By means of a process of communal embellishment the account was gradually altered and the event lifted out of its setting in the context of natural process. This process of providing the account with a "supernatural" dress continued after the O.T. canon was closed, but we can see it taking place in the development of the contents of the canon also. In this brief passage we detect three stages. The first is entirely natural: God uses an east wind to drive back the water, enabling the Israelites to cross over safely (vss. 15, 19a, 21aβbα, 22a). The second account (vss. 16, 19b, 20, 21aαbβ) attributes the disappearance of the water to Moses' use of the magic rod and hints that the cloud was a "supernatural" phenomenon. In the third account (vss. 17-18, 22b) the waters are so separated by the rod as to stand like walls.

15. It is assumed that Moses had cried to God, perhaps in intercession (32:32; Num. 21:7); this the Syriac text says explicitly. The command to go forward is an admonition to assume responsibility in faith. Men under grace will behave as creatures made in the divine image; only they will be able to do so. Let Israel "pull up stakes" and move toward its goal.

16. The dividing of the water by the rod (E) leads on to the later embellishment (P) that the water stood up as walls!

enemy moved to the coast during the night. "The landing went wrong from the beginning. The engineers' commanding officer and his second-in-command were killed a few minutes after they reached the beach."¹

Yet many religious people would agree that it was better to pay this terrible price rather than have it said that it was not a fair fight because supernatural powers were interfering on behalf of one side. Perhaps there will always be the two schools of thought, for the story of God causing the sea to divide to save his people and drown his enemies appeals to the childish hope for an easy, wondrous way out of our difficulties—a story crooned at the cradle of all religious faith.

Most of us perhaps rejoice in the old story of King Canute:

He did one thing to the shame of Court-Flatterers, which is worth our taking notice of: While the Tide was coming in, he caused his Royal Seat to be put on the Shore; and, with all the State that Majesty could put into his Countenance, said thus to the Sea: "Thou Sea, . . . I charge thee come no further upon my Land, neither presume to wet the Feet of Thy Sovereign Lord." But the Sea, as before, came rowling on, and without reverence did both wet and dash him: Whereat the King quickly rising, wished all about him to behold and consider the weak and frivolous Power of a King.²

¹ Ibid., p. 422.

² Great Historical Dictionary, article "Canute."

For every great religious leader and every great church are surrounded by flatterers who tell them they possess from God powers over nature or history or the fate of the dead. Few such leaders or churches would dare to do what King Canute did and demonstrate how helpless they are to change the powers of nature, the facts of history, or to interfere in the world beyond. For the child in us all likes to read in Thomas Fuller how the Dutch escaped . . . the hostility of the Turks, who waited for them on the other side of Meander. The river was not fordable; ship or bridge the Christians had none: when, behold, Conrade the emperor adventured an action, which, because it was successful, shall be accounted valiant, otherwise we should term it desperate. After an exhortation to his army, he commanded them all at once to flounce into the river. Meander was plunged by their plunging into it: his water stood amazed, as unresolved whether to retreat to the fountain, or proceed to the sea, and in this ecstasy afforded them a dry passage over the stream. . . . The affrighted Turks, on the other side, thinking there was no contending with them that did teach nature itself obedience, offered their throats to the Christians' swords, and were killed in such number, that whole piles of dead bodies remain there for a monument; like those heaps of the Cimbrians slain by Marius, near Marseilles, where afterwards the inhabitants walled their vineyards with skulls, and guarded their grapes with dead men.³

³ The History of the Holy War, Bk. II, ch. xxviii.

17 And I, behold, I will harden the hearts of the Egyptians, and they shall follow them: and I will get me honor upon Pharaoh, and upon all his host, upon his chariots, and upon his horsemen.

18 And the Egyptians shall know that I am the LORD, when I have gotten me honor upon Pharaoh, upon his chariots, and upon his horsemen.

19 ¶ And the Angel of God, which went before the camp of Israel, removed and went behind them; and the pillar of the cloud went from before their face, and stood behind them:

go on dry ground through the sea. 17 And I will harden the hearts of the Egyptians, so that they shall go in after them and I will get glory over Pharaoh and all his host, his chariots, and his horsemen. 18 And the Egyptians shall know that I am the LORD, when I have gotten glory over Pharaoh, his chariots, and his horsemen."

19 Then the angel of God who went before the host of Israel moved and went behind them; and the pillar of cloud moved from before them and stood behind them,

17. The momentarily resurgent Pharaoh will suffer a defeat that will establish the rule of God beyond cavil. With respect to the will of God it is not possible to hold "free elections"! Men vote "Yes" or they are destroyed.

19. The angel of God (E) and the pillar of cloud (J) are synonyms: both symbolize the protecting presence of Yahweh (13:21-22). As on the Passover night (12:42), God stood guard over his people.

Josephus also supports the credibility of our narrative by telling his readers that "for the sake of those that accompanied Alexander, king of Macedonia, who yet lived comparatively but a little while ago, the Pamphylian Sea retired and afforded them a passage through itself, when they had no other way to go."⁴ W. H. Bennett adds a citation from another writer who says that "the Pamphilian Sea did not only open a passage for Alexander, but, by rising and elevating its waters, did pay him homage as its king."⁵

To childish minds miracles seem necessary lest man should ascribe his escape to his own ingenuity. But the mystics speak of "God thinking in me"; Jacob Boehme tells of "what God knew in him"; these are profound suggestions of the relation that all human thinking bears to the divine mind. As we grow more mature we begin to see that God's love and power are manifested in a still greater degree when he inspires people to think up for themselves some ingenious way of outwitting their Pharaoh and getting across their Red Sea; this was the way the American colonies escaped from their taskmasters in 1774-76.⁶

But the great scene at the Red Sea still survives as a metaphorical expression of the faith that God does stand on the side of the unjustly downtrodden and helps them to victory in ways that seem mysterious to both them and their oppressors.

⁴ Antiquities II. 16. 5.

⁵ Exodus, pp. 126-27.

⁶ Van Doren, Benjamin Franklin, pp. 336-52, 462-63, et passim.

19-22. The Protecting Angel.—The story in our text consists of sections taken from J, E, P, and an editor, R. In E's account there is apparently an "angel" rather than a "pillar." The Egyptians could not attack when they caught up with the children of Israel, owing to the change in position of the spiritual obstruction which conducted and, in this case, protected the people. The miracle of invisibility is commonly made use of by the deity in Arabian folklore and in primitive folklore generally. Everyone has dreamed at times of how much good or harm he could do if only he were invisible. The smoke screens of modern warfare are the scientific fulfillment of these dreams. Our writers here use the figure as symbol of the protecting care of God over his own. This kind of protection by God corresponds to something very deep and real in human experience. A prominent man once told of how as a boy he joined a Methodist country church, and how those good people unconsciously formed a kind of spiritual phalanx around him during the most dangerous period of his boyhood, protecting him both before and behind from dangers he knew little of at the time. Another man, one of a family of sons whose parents were absent from them as missionaries in the Orient during their boyhood, said: "We have all turned out pretty well, and this is due to the letters we used to receive from our mother; what could you do but be good, when you got letters with 20 And it came between the camp of the Egyptians and the camp of Israel; and it was a cloud and darkness to them, but it gave light by night to these: so that the one came not near the other all the night.

21 And Moses stretched out his hand over the sea; and the LORD caused the sea to go back by a strong east wind all that night, and made the sea dry land, and the waters were divided.

22 And the children of Israel went into the midst of the sea upon the dry ground: and the waters were a wall unto them on their right hand, and on their left.

23 ¶ And the Egyptians pursued, and went in after them to the midst of the sea, even all Pharaoh's horses, his chariots, and his horsemen.

24 And it came to pass, that in the morning watch the LORD looked unto the host of the Egyptians through the pillar of fire and of the cloud, and troubled the host of the Egyptians, 20 coming between the host of Egypt and the host of Israel. And there was the cloud and the darkness; and the night passed^p without one coming near the other all night.

21 Then Moses stretched out his hand over the sea; and the LORD drove the sea back by a strong east wind all night, and made the sea dry land, and the waters were divided. 22 And the people of Israel went into the midst of the sea on dry ground, the waters being a wall to them on their right hand and on their left. 23 The Egyptians pursued, and went in after them into the midst of the sea, all Pharaoh's horses, his chariots, and his horsemen. 24 And in the morning watch the LORD in the pillar of fire and of cloud looked down upon the host of the Egyptians, and discomfited the

^p Gk: Heb and it lit up the night

20. The point of this is that the cloud (i.e., the divine presence) and the darkness of night kept the two groups hidden from each other. The Hebrew and it lit up the night (RSV mg.) rests on a corrupt text and the RSV has wisely followed the LXX reading.

21-22. Since the wind is from the east we must assume that the crossing took place somewhere near the eastern shore of the sea or lake, probably Lake Timsah. In flat marshy districts large areas are often intermittently covered by shallow water or laid dry by the action of the wind; e.g., almost annually in the spring high winds off the Persian Gulf blow in waters at high tide to cover all the area lying south of Zobeir in Iraq, a distance of about twenty-five miles.

4. GOD DESTROYS HIS ENEMIES (14:23-31)

23. The final scene in the dramatic act in which God reveals his power is now presented. The heavily armed Egyptians follow Israel in a path that is less treacherous for the Israelites fleeing on foot. In Palestine, for generations, Israelites in war were guerrilla fighters who were canny in turning the technological superiority of their foes to their own advantage (Judg. 4:13; 5:19-23; Josh. 11:1-9; I Kings 20:22-30).

24. The morning watch is probably the period from 2 to 6 A.M. Here and in vs. 27 we are left with the impression that the successful crossing of the Israelites and the destruction of the Egyptians were all over as morning broke. We are reminded of the nocturnal defeat of the gods of Egypt (11:4-5). This statement about a crossing by night must somehow be harmonized with the statement in vs. 20 that they did not come sentences in them like this, 'I thank my God that I do not have to worry about any of my boys'?' That mother was a protecting angel or pillar before and behind and all around her children. One compares her with the worrying mother of whom her student son said, "I can't work at home, for I know that she is sitting there at the other side of the door worrying about me." Religion, like science, takes the forces in life that are running to waste and turns them into power. It turns worry into prayer, depression into humility, pride into thanksgiving; it turns the destructive smoldering fires and smoke into protective pillars or even, as our friend E would prefer to say, into guardian angels.

23-31. The Hour of Vengeance.—It is very seldom in real life that one finds all the rats caught in one trap. Such scenes as this at the Red Sea or in Nuremberg courtroom in 1946

25 And took off their chariot wheels, that they drave them heavily: so that the Egyptians said, Let us flee from the face of Israel; for the LORD fighteth for them against the Egyptians.

26 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Stretch out thine hand over the sea, that the waters may come again upon the Egyptians, upon their chariots, and upon their horsemen.

27 And Moses stretched forth his hand over the sea, and the sea returned to his strength when the morning appeared; and the Egyptians fled against it; and the LORD overthrew the Egyptians in the midst of the sea.

28 And the waters returned, and covered the chariots, and the horsemen, and all the host of Pharaoh that came into the sea after them; there remained not so much as one of them.

host of the Egyptians, 25 clogging^q their chariot wheels so that they drove heavily; and the Egyptians said, "Let us flee from before Israel; for the LORD fights for them against the Egyptians."

26 Then the LORD said to Moses, "Stretch out your hand over the sea, that the water may come back upon the Egyptians, upon their chariots, and upon their horsemen."

27 So Moses stretched forth his hand over the sea, and the sea returned to its wonted flow when the morning appeared; and the Egyptians fled into it, and the LORD routed^r the Egyptians in the midst of the sea. 28 The waters returned and covered the chariots and the horsemen and all the host^s of Pharaoh that had followed them into the sea; not so much as one of them remained.

^q Or binding. Sam Gk Syr: Heb removing

^r Heb shook off

^s Gk Syr: Heb to all the host near each other all night and with the statement in vs. 21 that the strong east wind blew all night. For cultic reasons, notably on account of the Passover ritual, the historic incident may have been crowded into a single night. The normal meaning of the Hebrew word translated host is "camp." It is possible that in this verse we have a statement about a confusion in the enemy camp during the night, a confusion caused by the divine presence (vss. 19-20). This verse seems to continue vs. 20 and to interrupt vss. 23-25.

25. As frequently in the account of the plagues, the Egyptians recognize that Yahweh is their real enemy. Nowhere in the account is the prowess or leadership of Moses intruded upon what is presented as wholly the work of the Lord.

26. Israel is already safely across; not the turning of the wind but Moses' hand makes the waters come back.

28-31. It is not specifically said that the Pharaoh was drowned. Later tradition inferred this on the basis of vss. 5-10. In terms of the relativities of historical process, even the utter destruction of Pharaoh's forces was an event of very minor import. It did not alter the fortunes of the empire of Egypt. The writers and editors of this account may have been under no illusions about this, for Egypt was frequently a threat to Israel's political security. Yet this insignificant event was in Israel the key that transformed the meaning of all history. Egypt was the same Egypt. But for the community of faith that sprang from this event it no longer bore the same meaning as heretofore. They had seen "the great hand" of God. What is of moment is the victory of God, not the drowning of the Egyptians.

are exceptional. It usually takes years, and generally it is never wholly accomplished. Did Pharaoh himself perish in the inundation? What happened to Hitler? These questions remain unanswered for years and perhaps forever. Life never seems to have as neat an edge as any theory of life presupposes. Although the point is not labored, the writers seem to imply that the drowning of the Egyptians was a just punishment for the killing of the newborn Hebrew boys (1:16). Wholesale extermination of the enemy has always been the vindictive dream of persecuted peoples. Here there was justification for gloating over the corpses, for only the pursuing army was destroyed. It was left for our age at Hiroshima to come within sight of the realization of that age-long dream of the depraved human heart in its most horrible form. There is always justification to produce in the court; but inevitably history judges the use of power. How shall the virtuous triumphant of 1945 stand on this count at the bar of the ages?

29 But the children of Israel walked upon dry land in the midst of the sea; and the waters were a wall unto them on their right hand, and on their left.

30 Thus the LORD saved Israel that day out of the hand of the Egyptians; and Israel saw the Egyptians dead upon the seashore.

31 And Israel saw that great work which the LORD did upon the Egyptians: and the people feared the LORD, and believed the LORD, and his servant Moses.

15 Then sang Moses and the children of Israel this song unto the LORD, 29 But the people of Israel walked on dry ground through the sea, the waters being a wall to them on their right hand and on their left.

30 Thus the LORD saved Israel that day from the hand of the Egyptians; and Israel saw the Egyptians dead upon the seashore.

31 And Israel saw the great work which the LORD did against the Egyptians, and the people feared the LORD; and they believed in the LORD and in his servant Moses.

15 Then Moses and the people of Israel sang this song to the LORD, saying,

5. HYMNS IN PRAISE OF YAHWEH (15:1-21)

Two victory hymns in honor of Yahweh follow immediately after the account of Israel's deliverance: the Song of Moses and the Song of Miriam. Very probably the latter

29. Dry Land in the Midst of the Sea.—This is one of the great poetically descriptive verses of the Bible, symbolic of a life lived in the spirit of Ps. 2. Dry land in the midst of the sea. Mud is the obstacle to all true progress. How it clutters up our inner lives—words, words, words; inexact thinking; unsatisfied and unsublimated desires; moods of gloomy worry. Dante places all the sad, sullen, and slothful deep in mud in hell. It is a picture of an inner experience, this scene when Moses stretches forth the magic rod and all the mud dries up and there is suddenly before the people a fair way to walk upon. It is a very simple experience.

Hence you may see why our Saviour, who, though he had all Wisdom, and came to be the Light of the World, is yet so short in his Instructions, and gives so small a Number of Doctrines to Mankind, whilst every Moral Teacher, writes Volumes upon every single Virtue.⁷

The pearl of great price is the fact that all the Holy Nature, Spirit, Tempers, and Inclinations of Christ, lie as in a Seed in the Centre of thy Soul.⁸

It was a kind of "walking faith" when Moses held up the staff of God's promise and then began walking into the sea. One has to do both in order to find the mud drying up and the sea of troubles becoming as a protective wall on his right hand and on his left. Every new morning one has to practice, through the best thinking of which he is capable, the sincerest detestation of the slum within him, the most imaginative and realistic picture in his mind of the promises of God, and a forward motion, committing himself irrevocably to the new way miraculously being opened up for him as he goes along.

⁷ William Law, The Spirit of Prayer. Part II, Dialogue 2.

⁸ Ibid., Part I, ch. ii.

To provide the figure some wider reference, it is only when sitting in cushioned seats that denominations disagree; in such triumphant experiences as that at the Red Sea, all dissensions and murmurings are forgotten and the church of Christ is one and victorious because it is engaged in its proper business of victory over sin. Hear again what William Law wrote in 1756:

Under this Light, I am neither Protestant, nor Papist, according to the common Acceptation of the Words.—I cannot consider myself as belonging only to one Society of Christians, in separation and distinction from all others.—It would be as hurtful to me, if not more so, than any worldly Partiality. And therefore as the Defects, Corruptions, and Imperfections, which, some way or other, are to be found in all Churches, hinder not my Communion with that, under which my Lot is fallen, so neither do they hinder my being in full Union, and hearty Fellowship with all that is Christian, Holy, and Good, in every other Church Division.⁹

A common war for a common cause has been heretofore the only method of uniting nations; churches will become one only in the ranks of one army fighting sin in themselves. As soon as the danger was over, the Israelites had time to dissent and murmur again, but when they were in peril together, they had no time but to fight, march forward, and sing together songs of victory.

15:1-19. The Song of Moses.—The O.T. contains three songs attributed to Moses: this one; and spake, saying, I will sing unto the LORD, for he hath triumphed gloriously: the horse and his rider hath he thrown into the sea.

⁹ A Collection of Letters on the Most Interesting and Important Subjects, Letter I.

"I will sing to the LORD, for he has triumphed gloriously; the horse and his rider[†] he has thrown into the sea.

[†] Or its chariot

actually originated at the rejoicing in Israel on the occasion of its escape. Therefore, though it may have had cultic perpetuation, it belongs in this context simply on the basis of chronological sequence in history. But the Song of Moses originated later. It recounts God's protection of Israel during its pilgrimage in the desert (vss. 13-16) and assumes the establishment of the temple and its worship in Jerusalem (vs. 17). Its earliest possible date, therefore, is the era of the united kingdom. It may be much later. This song had probably a place in the cultus, and may have been used liturgically for a feast at which God's victory at the sea was especially stressed. Thus it has been suggested (Beer, Exodus, p. 84) that the song was a Passover cantata composed for, and presented on the occasion of, the great celebration of the feast in Jerusalem attending the reformation of Josiah. Many scholars who are identified with the "myth and ritual school" of interpretation look upon 12:1-15:21 as, for the most part, a block of liturgical material of which the song is an integral part. Those among them who hold to the idea of an annual enthronement festival of Yahweh in Jerusalem claim that this song was a hymn used on that occasion (Aage Bentzen, Introduction to the Old Testament [Copenhagen: G. E. C. Gad, 1948] I, 163). In any case, it is not on the basis of chronological sequence in history but for the sake of stressing the meaning of a specific event in history that the editors have included this song in their book.

Deut. 31:22; Ps. 90. A study of the vocabulary style, and subject matter of this song shows that it is an expression of the sentiments and feelings of Moses as they were conceived by a writer at a much later time. Like the conversations in Eden in Milton's Paradise Lost, or the aspirations of John Brown by a modern poet, this song tells how Moses must have felt after the victory at the Red Sea, as a later writer tries to understand and appreciate his spirit. This poet looks before and after and sees the occasion in view of subsequent events. The poem probably was taken from a book of patriotic and religious songs in common use by the people at the close of the monarchy or in postexilic times. One sees Israel developing toward a true monotheism. The gods of other nations are still conceived of as existing, but Yahweh proves himself mightier than they. This is a real step toward the faith that there is but one God (vs. 11). Like all patriotic songs, this poem tells of national triumphs without mentioning the reverses sustained. Vss. 14-19 represent easier going than that related in 13:17; Num. 20:18; but few nations can stand any reference to their defeats and mistakes. Franklin was much criticized when he wrote, "During the course of a long life in which I have made observations of public affairs, it has appeared to me that almost every war between the Indians and the whites has been occasioned by some injustice of the latter towards the former."¹ The early American settlers acted much as the children of Israel did toward the original inhabitants of the lands they wished to occupy:

Under Captain John Mason, [they] fell upon the encampment with fire, sword, blunderbuss, and tomahawk. Only a handful escaped, and few prisoners were taken. Flames consumed almost all, and it was a fearful sight, said the Pilgrims in phrases quoted with delight . . . by Cotton Mather, "to see them thus frying in ye fyer, and ye streams of blood quenching ye same, and horrible was ye stinck and sente thereof; but ye victory seemed a sweete sacrifice, and they gave prayse thereof to God."²

Such was the end of the proud Pequot nation.

Winthrop informed Bradford that he had taken personal charge of the wife of a Pequot sachem, a woman "of a very modest countenance and behavior," whose only request was that the English "not abuse her body."³

How much religious value there is in the fact that Moses' song and the Pilgrims' thanksgiving ascribe the victories to God rather than to their own prowess remains a question. This Red

¹ Albert H. Smith, The Writings of Benjamin Franklin (New York: The Macmillan Co., 1905-7), IX, 625.

² George F. Willison, Saints and Strangers (New York: Reynal & Hitchcock, 1945), p. 306

³ Ibid.

a) SONG OF MOSES (15:1-18)

The song is a splendid example of biblical poetry. Spontaneous, even fiery, it nevertheless displays a highly developed and meticulously applied sense of literary form. Its dynamic and exuberant power is communicated rather than stymied by its studied construction. There is here all of the exhilaration but little of the "rugged" obscurity of older pieces (cf. Judg. 5). The concern, the mood, and to some extent the structure make it proper to classify this poem as a "hymn" in the sense applied to that term by the Gunkel-Eissfeldt school of literary analysis which studies the literary forms of poetry according to cultic usage. The song praises Yahweh for his goodness to Israel. The LORD shall reign for ever and ever: This exclamation is typical of the "hymns" of praise (Pss. 47:9; 96:10; 97:1). The quotation of the Song of Miriam provides the song with an introduction typical of the "hymn." It is also characteristic that the Lord is the principal character throughout, though he appears only in the third person, and that there should be a recital of God's power and of his care for Israel, past and present. However the contents of this description are in some respects nontypical. In the normal type of hymn descriptions are not specifically historical. They are more general, and reflective of Near Eastern mythology in their account of God as creator and ruler of his people. Vss. 2-3, 6-7, 11-12 well illustrate this character of the hymn, but they are interspersed by bits of what one may describe as a historical ballad (vss. 4-5, 8-10, 13-17), possibly not all from one source. This historical material has been beautifully fitted into and harmonized with the materials of the purer hymn type. Bentzen (Intro. to O.T., I, 163) feels that the main subject of the hypothetical enthronement festival was Yahweh's victory at the sea. This assimilative process, by which more and more the historical was fitted into the form of the erstwhile mythological, illustrates a very general and profoundly significant phenomenon in Israel's religious history. The mythological heritage is always in process of being historicized until finally, as in Christianity, the liturgical year is essentially a "historical" year rather than a natural year, without, however, losing sight of the natural cycle. The hymn, as a cultic form, was gradually transformed from praising a God whose victory was mythological to one whose victory took place in a certain month on a certain day at the Sea of Reeds.

Since the poet's account of Israel's history stops with the era of Solomon (970-930), this poem may date from that time. Yet such a consideration is not decisive, for the poem's concern is not Israel's history but Yahweh's rule in Jerusalem. Those who see in the song a hymn used at an annual enthronement festival for Yahweh in the temple tend to date it rather early, since this festival is conceived to have had a long history in the era of the monarchy. The buoyancy and power of the poem fit well in the heroic age of David (cf. II Sam. 1:19-27). But power and literary artistry continued long after his era (cf. Hab. 3). Until it became associated with the liturgy of a hypothetical enthronement festival of Yahweh the poem was most commonly associated with the Deuteronomistic period. A. H. McNeile (The Book of Exodus [London: Methuen & Co., 1908; "Westminster Commentaries"], p. 88) pointed out that the poem draws on the prose account as it now stands rather than on any one source present in it, but our recovery of a sense of the role of oral tradition must qualify the weight of that evidence. The vocabulary, however, also belongs to the period beginning ca. 600 B.C. Beer decided for this later date on the ground that the song teaches the universal rule of Yahweh from Jerusalem, a teaching characteristic of the Deuteronomists (Deut. 26:19; 28:1, 13; Isa. 2:2-4) but not attested in the documents of the Davidic age.

15:1. As characteristic of the "hymn," the song is sung by the entire community and concerns the life of the entire assembly of Israel. The Song of Miriam serves as introduction. The LXX, both here and in vs. 21, gives the first verb as a cohortative, "Let us sing." The "hymn" style argues for the imperative present in vs. 21. God has "risen up" in his majesty. The idea of "pride" is carried by the Hebrew root; Yahweh had displayed his true divinity. The chariots rather than the riders were lost in the water. There was no cavalry.

2 The LORD is my strength and song, and he is become my salvation: he is my God, and I will prepare him a habitation; my father's God, and I will exalt him.

3 The LORD is a man of war: the LORD is his name.

4 Pharaoh's chariots and his host hath he cast into the sea: his chosen captains also are drowned in the Red sea.

5 The depths have covered them: they sank into the bottom as a stone.

6 Thy right hand, O LORD, is become glorious in power: thy right hand, O LORD, hath dashed in pieces the enemy.

7 And in the greatness of thine excellency thou hast overthrown them that rose up against thee: thou sentest forth thy wrath, which consumed them as stubble.

8 And with the blast of thy nostrils the waters were gathered together, the floods stood upright as a heap, and the depths were congealed in the heart of the sea.

2 The LORD is my strength and my song, and he has become my salvation; this is my God, and I will praise him, my father's God, and I will exalt him.

3 The LORD is a man of war; the LORD is his name.

4 "Pharaoh's chariots and his host he cast into the sea; and his picked officers are sunk in the Red Sea.

5 The floods cover them; they went down into the depths like a stone.

6 Thy right hand, O LORD, glorious in power, thy right hand, O LORD, shatters the enemy.

7 In the greatness of thy majesty thou overthrowest thy adversaries; thou sendest forth thy fury, it consumes them like stubble.

8 At the blast of thy nostrils the waters piled up, the floods stood up in a heap; the deeps congealed in the heart of the sea.

2. The first half of this verse is quoted in Isa. 12:2; Ps. 118:14. Yahweh has saved the poet and Israel. In this liturgical contest the content of the salvation is the material and social security of the community of Israel in its own land. The phrase my father's God simply underscores the phrase this is my God in the manner characteristic of parallelism in Hebrew poetry.

3. The central moment in the revelation of God at the Exodus is power, a moment which is here presented in a military metaphor: Yahweh is a warrior.

4-5. This is a specified historical reference. Vs. 4 describes the deed of Yahweh. In terms of meaning the phrase and his host is redundant; the chariots and their "crews" (14:7) constituted the host of Egypt at the incident in question. In terms of meter the phrase does not fit. In vs. 5 the shallow Sea of Reeds becomes an abyss like the "great deep" of mythology.

6-7. In this more strictly "hymn" section of the song the references to Yahweh's power to overthrow his enemies are general. He who displayed his power at the sea is always powerful.

8-10. The poet's account of the scene at the sea combines the natural movement of the water by the wind (14:21) and the report (14:22) that the waters stood like walls or, as here, in a heap (cf. Josh. 3:13, 16). The breath of Yahweh is the wind (cf. vs. 10). The deeps congealed in the heart of the sea: This phrase refers most probably to the fountains connecting the sea with the mythological ocean to which the ancients thought

Sea hymn has been quoted often in succeeding wars. The Latin version of vs. 10, Afflavit Deus et dissipati sunt, was the motto used by the English in their celebrations over the sinking of the Spanish Armada in 1588. The hymn is a celebration of the triumphal march of Yahweh to the center of his eternal world kingdom in Jerusalem (Ps. 146:10).

1. I Will Sing Unto Yahweh.—J. G. von Herder, speaking of the drama of his day, says, "An ancient Greek coming into one of our performances would say, 'Is it a decorated grave?'"

9 The enemy said, I will pursue, I will overtake, I will divide the spoil; my lust shall be satisfied upon them; I will draw my sword, my hand shall destroy them.

10 Thou didst blow with thy wind, the sea covered them; they sank as lead in the mighty waters.

11 Who is like unto thee, O LORD, among the gods? who is like thee, glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, doing wonders?

12 Thou stretchedst out thy right hand, the earth swallowed them.

13 Thou in thy mercy hast led forth the people which thou hast redeemed: thou hast guided them in thy strength unto thy holy habitation.

14 The people shall hear, and be afraid: sorrow shall take hold on the inhabitants of Palestina.

15 Then the dukes of Edom shall be amazed; the mighty men of Moab, trembling shall take hold upon them; all the inhabitants of Canaan shall melt away.

9 The enemy said, 'I will pursue, I will overtake,

I will divide the spoil, my desire shall have its fill of them.

I will draw my sword, my hand shall destroy them.'

10 Thou didst blow with thy wind, the sea covered them;

they sank as lead in the mighty waters.

11 "Who is like thee, O LORD, among the gods?

Who is like thee, majestic in holiness, terrible in glorious deeds, doing wonders?

12 Thou didst stretch out thy right hand, the earth swallowed them.

13 "Thou hast led in thy steadfast love the people whom thou hast redeemed, thou hast guided them by thy strength to thy holy abode.

14 The peoples have heard, they tremble; pangs have seized on the inhabitants of Philistia.

15 Now are the chiefs of Edom dismayed; the leaders of Moab, trembling seize them:

all the inhabitants of Canaan have melted away.

the seas to be connected. In vs. 9 six brief clauses, tense with action, effectively communicate the eager confidence and greedy desire with which the enemy entered the fray. The last verb does not simply signify destruction but basically carries the idea of taking possession. Egypt again wishes to claim Israel as its own. But as vs. 10 emphasizes, the power of Yahweh is so much greater as to make this utterly impossible.

11-12. This bit of the hymn is in the form of the "negative question," a common liturgical device (cf. Pss. 35:10; 71:19; 89:7-9; 113:5-6). The verses reveal how faith generalized the event on which it rests. Because Yahweh had shown himself Lord over Pharaoh, he is above all gods. In the phrase majestic in holiness the poet compares Yahweh and the other gods. He is in a class apart, unapproachable: his freedom and power, rather than his ethical character, here determine this distinction. The LXX renders in holiness as "among the holy ones," i.e., "among the gods." The Hebrew says that Yahweh is feared in respect to or on account of "praises," i.e., the deeds for which he is praised (cf. Ps. 78:4; Isa. 63:7).

13. God led his people as pilgrims after setting them free. The holy abode may here refer to the entire holy land (Jer. 10:25; 25:30), but in vs. 17 Mount Zion seems unmistakably singled out. Hēsedh is the Hebrew word translated steadfast love. The LXX gives it not as ἔλεος but as δικαιοσύνη. The parallelism suggests "faithfulness" or "power."

14-16. The writer is deeply convinced of the actuality and adequacy of Yahweh's providential care for Israel. He illustrates his faith by suggesting that Israel's career was always smooth, which it was not. Edom and Moab made Israel avoid their territories (Num. 20:18-21; 21:13). The inhabitants of Canaan did not melt away but, with the Philistines, troubled Israel until the era of David (Judg. 2:21-23). This glossing over of the hard realities of history does not vitiate the sincerity or the truth of the poet's faith, 16 Fear and dread shall fall upon them; by the greatness of thine arm they shall be as still as a stone; till thy people pass over, O LORD, till the people pass over, which thou hast purchased.

17 Thou shalt bring them in, and plant them in the mountain of thine inheritance, in the place, O LORD, which thou hast made for thee to dwell in; in the sanctuary, O LORD, which thy hands have established.

18 The LORD shall reign for ever and ever.

19 For the horse of Pharaoh went in with his chariots and with his horsemen into the sea, and the LORD brought again the waters of the sea upon them; but the children of Israel went on dry land in the midst of the sea.

20 ¶ And Miriam the prophetess, the sister of Aaron, took a timbrel in her hand;

16 Terror and dread fall upon them; because of the greatness of thy arm, they are as still as a stone, till thy people, O LORD, pass by, till the people pass by whom thou hast purchased.

17 Thou wilt bring them in, and plant them on thy own mountain, the place, O LORD, which thou hast made for thy abode, the sanctuary, O LORD, which thy hands have established.

18 The LORD will reign for ever and ever."

19 For when the horses of Pharaoh with his chariots and his horsemen went into the sea, the LORD brought back the waters of the sea upon them; but the people of Israel walked on dry ground in the midst of the sea. 20 Then Miriam, the prophetess, the

but it does convey to later generations an unrealistic impression of the relationship of revelation to nature and history.

18. This exultant cry of faith, the heart and focus of the hymn, expresses the current meaning of the historic rescue at the sea. The two are ineradicably bound together.

b) SONG OF MIRIAM (15:19-21)

19. The editor's introduction connects the song with the prose account of the deliverance (ch. 14).

20-21. Miriam leads a chorus of women who perform a victory dance. It is because of such activity that she is called a prophetess. The chorus repeated the hymn that Miriam

You stride and sigh and rant, move the arms, arrange the features, reason and declaim! But voice and feeling never burst into song, do you not miss this accent of the true Voice of God?"⁴ A Welsh woman, after hearing an eloquent preacher, said, "Ah, yes, but he ought to have sung the last part of the sermon!" Great sermons seem to be at least on the verge of breaking into song: John Donne, preaching at St. Paul's on Christmas Day, 1626, at Communion:

And then to come from that table . . . with a bosom peace in thine own conscience in that seal of thy reconciliation, in that Sacrament; that so, riding at that anchor, and in that calm, whether God enlarge thy voyage by enlarging thy life, or put thee into the harbour, by the breath, by the breathlessness of death, either way, east or west, thou mayest depart in peace according to his word, that is, as he shall be pleased to manifest his pleasure upon thee.

When read aloud, when spoken as in the pulpit, such speech is nigh unto song, song like that into which the people of Israel broke spontaneously in their day of triumph and tragedy.

⁴ Sämtliche Werke, ed. Bernhard Suphan (Berlin: Wiedmann, 1885), XXIII, 347.

20-21. Miriam's Response.—Just why Miriam should be called the sister of Aaron, who is hardly mentioned in this narrative, rather than the sister of Moses is a mystery. Perhaps E did not consider Moses and Aaron to be brothers, or, as no learned critic seems to suggest, perhaps Aaron and Miriam were twins. Stanley A. Cook suggests that Miriam and Aaron may have been only stepsister and stepbrother of Moses.⁵ She was probably the sister spoken of as watching the baby's ark in the Nile (2:4). The name appears as Mary in the N.T.; among Semitic women it was considered desirable to be plump, which is probably the derivative meaning of the name. Miriam is also mentioned in Num. 12:1-15; 26:59; 20:1; Deut. 24:9; Mic. 6:4.

The form in Hebrew is that of a victory dance song. Jewish women were accustomed to celebrate victories in this manner (see Judg. 5:1 ff.; 11:34; I Sam. 18:6). Every age reads the Bible, and all the women went out after her with timbrels and with dances.

⁵ Article "Miriam," in T. K. Cheyne and J. Sutherland Black, eds., Encyclopaedia Biblica (New York: The Macmillan Co., 1902), Vol. III, col. 3152.

21 And Miriam answered them, Sing ye to the LORD, for he hath triumphed gloriously: the horse and his rider hath he thrown into the sea.

22 So Moses brought Israel from the Red sea, and they went out into the wilderness of Shur; and they went three days in the wilderness, and found no water.

sister of Aaron, took a timbrel in her hand; and all the women went out after her with timbrels and dancing. 21 And Miriam sang to them:

“Sing to the LORD, for he has triumphed gloriously;
the horse and his rider he has thrown into the sea.”

22 Then Moses led Israel onward from the Red Sea, and they went into the wilderness of Shur; they went three days in the sang out. The introductory statement that Miriam took a timbrel reminds us that liturgical “hymns” frequently cite the instruments used in their performance (Pss. 33; 92; 98; 150).

D. THE PILGRIMAGE TO SINAI (15:22–18:27)

The deliverance at the sea was the climax of the Exodus. Taught by Moses, Israel saw the whole process that led to it as the work of Yahweh in which he disclosed his power and lordship. The permanent meaning of this event for Israel, however, is still to be made clear. There is a momentary exaltation, but this must give way to a response in which, in cultus and social institutions, Israel lives out the meaning of the revelation in its own communal and historical existence. Eventually Sinai becomes the focus for the implementation of the faith of the Exodus. The Exodus and Sinai become inextricably bound together. Every tendency in Israel's life castigated in the Bible as faithless and sinful is, in one way or another, determined by an outlook that denies or ignores the bond of Exodus-Sinai. Whether the cycle of episodes in 15:22–18:27, continued in Num. 10:29 ff., was originally oriented to Sinai is an open question. It has been persuasively argued that this cycle was actually focused on Kadesh and that the Sinai tradition (Exod. 19:10–Num. 10:28) now interrupts it (see “The Kenite Hypothesis,” Intro., pp. 839-40).

In relating the journey from the sea to Sinai the writers show little concern with the empirical facts of geography or history. The harshness and risk of life in the barren desert are pointed up, but there are few details. The general picture is put to the service of the writers' main purpose: to show that Israel, despite the existential character of its deliverance, was still subject to the moral and physical conditions of struggle that all omitting to notice those things in it of which it does not approve. The place of the dance in O.T. worship has been ignored and the importance of solemn assemblies has been underlined. But most scholars and saints are middle-aged before they become scholars or saints. So the example of Miriam and the exhortations of the author of Pss. 149; 150 have been forgotten. “The principal occasions of dancing are, in an ancient community, religious. . . . Dancing, then, was of the essence of a primitive religious festival.”⁶ “The use of dancing as a social pastime is comparatively modern.”⁷ Worship, however, has become too sedentary; indeed almost the only remnant left in some Protestant churches of the ritual dance is in the processional. Dancing, divorced from the church, has tended in modern times to take one of two lines, either popular degeneracy into vulgarity, or a professional revival of the ancient inspiration by which it becomes one of the supreme artistic forms for the expression both of ideas and emotion.

⁶ See article on “Dance” in Cheyne and Black, Encyclopaedia Biblica, Vol. I, cols. 998-99.

⁷ A. E. Crawley, “Processions and Dances,” in James Hastings, ed., Encyclopaedia of Religion and Ethics (New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1919), X, 362.

22-25. The Bitter Waters.—The murmuring begins as soon as the crisis and imperative demand for common action ends. It happens after every victorious war. Smaller discomforts are felt again when the great danger is over. Many of us would feel more at home with J than E or P; notice how he likes to find natural causes for events the others ascribe to miracle. J has a 23 ¶ And when they came to Marah, they could not drink of the waters of Marah, for they were bitter: therefore the name of it was called Marah.

24 And the people murmured against Moses, saying, What shall we drink?

25 And he cried unto the LORD; and the LORD showed him a tree, which when he wilderness and found no water. 23 When they came to Marah, they could not drink the water of Marah because it was bitter; therefore it was named Marah.^u 24 And the people murmured against Moses, saying, "What shall we drink?" 25 And he cried to the LORD; and the LORD showed him a tree,

^u That is Bitterness men meet in history, though with the difference that the revelation gave meaning and direction to the struggle. The desert pilgrimage with its fears and crises is made to convey the writers' teaching that Israel's fulfillment of life at the Exodus is a fulfillment in faith. Hence it must live responsibly in history.

1. THE CRISES (15:22-17:16)

Yahweh had destroyed Pharaoh and the gods of Egypt, but life for Israel was still the same. Thirst, hunger, and enemies remained inescapable facts. Security was, it seemed, no greater than before. This whole series of incidents makes it plain. But those who relate it are likewise attesting that in the midst of this relentless process of nature and history God is as free and active as he was in the dramatic escape. And Yahweh is represented as "trying" Israel to see if it will live by this faith which can give significance to its historical pilgrimage.

a) MARAH (15:22-27)

22. The wilderness of Shur is the same as "the wilderness of Etham" (Num. 33:8). The way of Shur was a familiar caravan route that approached Kadesh-barnea as it led to Beer-sheba. Shur was familiar to the patriarchs (Gen. 16:7; 20:1; 25:18). This route of the wilderness of Shur is one possible route taken by the Israelites to Sinai-Horeb. Another possibility, perhaps more probable, is the present pilgrim route that leads toward the head of the Gulf of Aqabah. On the basis of the biblical evidence that tends to the conclusion that Sinai-Horeb is located in the Edom-Paran region (cf. 3:1-5), either one of these routes is more probably the way traveled by Israel than the route predicated upon the traditional Sinai site near the apex of the peninsula. A three-day journey by a mixed caravan was perhaps no more than fifty miles.

23. Brackish pools and wells are frequent in many desert areas. The account here has an etiological form, i.e., the Israelites are said to have given Marah its name. It is impossible definitely to locate the site.

24-25a. This incident may have parallel accounts in Massah-Meribah (17:1-7; Num. 20:1-12). The metaphor of "striving" (meribhāh) is not introduced here. The people "murmur" (cf. 16:1-12) against Moses. Moses does not show the irritation he does in the other accounts, nor are the people condemned for their fear. Yahweh, to whom Moses appeals, is the central actor in the healing (cf. II Kings 2:21; Ezek. 47:8) of the water. It may be that an originally independent allusion to a magic ritual, in which a bitter wood made bitter water sweet, has been recast with this theocentric concern. The Samar. text says that Yahweh "caused [Moses] to see" the wood. In the M.T. the root is ירה, "to point."

more scientific mind; he wants to know why and how. The Lord showed Moses a tree which he could throw into the bitter waters and make them sweet. Various plants are used in different parts of the world for this purpose. E. F. K. Rosenmüller mentions Nellimaran in Coromandel, Sassafras in Florida, and Yerva Caniani in Peru. Ferdinand de Lesseps was told by Arab chiefs that they used in this way a certain bitter thorn, growing in the desert, but nothing is known about it.

Treating the incident symbolically, we wonder if there is any tree which, thrown into the bitter waters of life, will make them sweet. The ancient philosopher said that a wise and good man could be perfectly happy even on the rack; the modern philosopher, Benjamin Jowett, when asked if he believed that was possible, had cast into the waters, the waters were made sweet: there he made for them a statute and an ordinance, and there he proved them, 26 And said, If thou wilt diligently hearken to the voice of the LORD thy God, and wilt do that which is right in his sight, and wilt give ear to his commandments, and keep all his statutes, I will put none of these diseases upon thee, which I have brought upon the Egyptians: for I am the LORD that healeth thee.

and he threw it into the water, and the water became sweet.

There the LORD^v made for them a statute and an ordinance and there he proved them, 26 saying, "If you will diligently hearken to the voice of the LORD, your God, and do that which is right in his eyes, and give heed to his commandments and keep all his statutes, I will put none of the diseases upon you which I put upon the Egyptians; for I am the LORD, your healer."

^v Heb he

25b-26. Yahweh, having healed the water, is presented as the healer of Israel (Deut. 32:39; Ps. 103:3). The vocabulary of this section and its preoccupation with the diseases of Egypt (cf. Deut. 7:15; 28:27, 60) mark it as the work of a Deuteronomistic editor. The phrase there he proved them associates the incidents with the Massah-Meribah accounts. The testing or proving is presented as something lying in the future. God challenges Israel to express its faith in his constant protection and power by keeping his law. In later ages rabbis used this verse as a prayer in the blessing of the sick.

replied, "Perhaps—a very good man on a very bad rack." This is about as far as we can go. The waters of life are sometimes bitter, and no art or religion can make them sweet. But religion can help us to drink bitter waters without being embittered ourselves. The highest point personal religion can reach is when it is possible for us to add the second clause to the first in the great text, "O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me: nevertheless, not as I will, but as thou wilt" (Matt. 26:39).

26. The Ultimate Fact of God.—Both the O.T. and the N.T. give much attention to bodily health in its relation to religious faith. This is true also of the religions of Greece, Egypt, and Babylonia, and indeed of most primitive faiths. Generally, as can be seen in Homer, external injuries and affections were treated by common-sense and often wise methods. But epidemics and obscurer complaints left the people helpless, and they had recourse to what seem to us superstitious religious rites such as spells, processions, or magical mixtures.

The history of the art and science of medicine has been largely the transfer of one type of ailment after another from treatment by superstitious or hit-and-miss methods to treatment by experimental knowledge. This general movement is typified by the shift in popular faith from solemn processions with sacred images in case of epidemics to modern methods of sanitation, etc.

The shift has largely been a salutary one, but in the process something has been lost. Montaigne's remark, "Whence proceeds the subtlest folly, but from the subtlest wisdom?"⁸ is really inscribed, though few scientists can see it, around the base of the image of the Great God Science, which stands by the boulevard of modern life opposite the Great God Mammon. The two idols are mighty, but they have feet of clay, for there are whole regions of human experience which they do not understand and have therefore ignored. They reign supreme, each over a section of human life. One must make friends with mammon to live at all (see G. B. Shaw's Major Barbara). Father Neville Figgis once acknowledged that after he had joined a monastic order, given to it all his worldly possessions, and taken the vow of poverty, he found he was as much dependent upon the present evil economic system as ever. A. J. Carlson, one of the high priests in the holy temple of science, said:

No matter how high in state, church, society or science the individual may be who makes pronouncement on any subject, the scientist always asks for the evidence. When no evidence is produced other than personal dicta, past or present "revelations" in dreams, or the "voice of God," the scientist can pay no attention whatsoever, except to ask: How do they get that way?⁹

This is a very superstitious statement, founded on the unproved idea that truth can be reached only by scientific methods. One can imagine Carlson buttonholing people coming out of a

⁸ Essays, Bk. II, ch. xii.

⁹ "Science and the Supernatural," The Scientific Monthly, LIX (1944), 85. See comments on this article, ibid., LIX (1944), 321-24.

27 ¶ And they came to Elim, where were twelve wells of water, and threescore and ten palm trees: and they encamped there by the waters.

16 And they took their journey from Elim, and all the congregation of the children of Israel came unto the wilderness of Sin, which is between Elim and Sinai, on the fifteenth day of the second month after their departing out of the land of Egypt.

27 Then they came to Elim, where there were twelve springs of water and seventy palm trees; and they encamped there by the water.

16 They set out from Elim, and all the congregation of the people of Israel came to the wilderness of Sin, which is between Elim and Sinai, on the fifteenth day of the second month after they had departed

27. Elim is a word meaning "gods" and "terebinths." The place must have been an oasis which was likewise a sacred site. It is possible that it is the site of Elath (Deut. 2:8; II Kings 16:6) at the head of the Gulf of Aqabah, but this suggestion, resting mainly on etymological affinity, must not be pressed.

b) THE MANNA (16:1-36)

16:1. The chronological note, on the fifteenth day of the second month (cf. 12:1), and the characteristic phrase, all the congregation of the people of Israel (vss. 1, 2, 9, 10), show that the bulk of this narrative is by the P writer. The wilderness of Sin is mentioned elsewhere only in 17:1; Num. 33:11-12. Nothing definite is said or known about it. The wilderness of Zin, however, can be quite definitely located to the immediate south of Judah (Num. 13:21; 20:1; 27:14; 33:36; 34:3; Deut. 32:51; Josh. 15:1, 3). It included Kadesh-barnea (Num. 20:1). One version of what may have been the single Marahmusic hall in an endeavor to find scientific evidence for their "pronouncements" that it was a good concert. He is right as far as verifiable facts are concerned, but he forgets that the poetry and faith of today sometimes become the scientific fact of tomorrow, and that to live wisely man has to make up his mind on more things than science can verify. We know very little about how things grow; we know more about disease than we do about health; there are strange powers of recovery in man which religion calls God. We can all help or hinder, but God does the growing in the garden and the healing in the hospital. "Lo, these are parts of his ways; but how little a portion is heard of him? but the thunder of his power who can understand?" (Job 26:14.)

27. The Immediate Blessing.—A pleasant interlude amid many miseries—this chance to camp by twelve wells of water, and threescore and ten palm trees. Some people seem to be so intent on getting on so as to be suitably ensconced in a final grave that they have no time to enjoy the passing day. They rush by Elim with its springs and palm trees because they have to reach some promised land. They do not enjoy their wedding because of fear that they may miss the scheduled train for the honeymoon; they do not enjoy their children as they grow up because they have to be so busy laying by for their education; they always have to be "after" doing something. If they ever get to heaven, which one may doubt, they will be annoyed when no answer is given to their repeated question, "Well, then, where do we go from here?" It is the happiness of going on together that is the fragrance of life; taste is in chewing slowly, not in swallowing. "Well, thank God, I have got here safely at last," said the hustler on his deathbed.

Sometimes we do as these people did and encamp there by the waters. All art and all literature and all music are the catching and holding the best and happiest moments of the best and happiest minds. "Stop! Look! Listen!" No matter where you are, you will find that

All places that the eye of heaven visits
Are to a wise man ports and happy havens.¹

Some of the most moving scenes in Tolstoy's War and Peace (perhaps of all modern books most like the O.T.) are descriptions of people simply being happy. Clifton Fadiman, in a foreword to the book, says the ability to describe such scenes has died out in our time because the simple glow of happiness seems so much less common than it was a century ago.

16:1-31. The Manna from God.—Religion does not exist anywhere as an essence: it is always mixed up with other things. In no scientist's,

¹ Shakespeare, King Richard II, Act I, scene 3.

2 And the whole congregation of the children of Israel murmured against Moses and Aaron in the wilderness:

3 And the children of Israel said unto them, Would to God we had died by the hand of the LORD in the land of Egypt, when we sat by the fleshpots, and when we did eat bread to the full; for ye have brought us forth into this wilderness, to kill this whole assembly with hunger.

4 ¶ Then said the LORD unto Moses, Behold, I will rain bread from heaven for you; and the people shall go out and gather a certain rate every day, that I may prove them, whether they will walk in my law, or no.

5 And it shall come to pass, that on the sixth day they shall prepare that which they bring in; and it shall be twice as much as they gather daily.

from the land of Egypt. 2 And the whole congregation of the people of Israel murmured against Moses and Aaron in the wilderness, 3 and said to them, "Would that we had died by the hand of the LORD in the land of Egypt, when we sat by the fleshpots and ate bread to the full; for you have brought us out into this wilderness to kill this whole assembly with hunger."

4 Then the LORD said to Moses, "Behold, I will rain bread from heaven for you; and the people shall go out and gather a day's portion every day, that I may prove them, whether they will walk in my law or not. 5 On the sixth day, when they prepare what they bring in, it will be twice as much as Massah-Meribah episode is located there (see Num. 20:1-13). When the traditional location of Sinai at the southern point of the peninsula is given up, it becomes difficult to avoid the conclusion that the two wildernesses are the same. This identification is actually made in the LXX transliteration.

2-3. The cause of murmuring, merely cited in 15:24, is here specified. Similar specifications are given in Num. 11:5-6, in an account that separates the coming of the quails from the gift of manna; and in Num. 20:3-5 where the people deplore the absence of fruit and water in the desert. Death by the hand of the LORD must refer to death from natural causes in contrast to the rigors of the desert. The people have lost faith in Yahweh's leadership and therefore denounce those who represent it.

4. This word of the Lord to Moses is an older, brief statement of the developed account of P in the midst of which it appears. The word to Moses in vss. 9-12 must originally have preceded vss. 6-8 which tell of the report Moses and Aaron gave of it to the people. The displacement was probably caused by the presence of vss. 4-5. The day's portion is not specified as in vs. 16. By providing food for only a day at a time Yahweh will test the people to see if they will live by faith in his power and deliverance. The petition in the Lord's Prayer, "Give us this day . . .," probably derives from this verse.

5. The note about the sixth day may be an old, undeveloped provision about the sabbath, later expanded to the account in vss. 22-30. More probably it is a preface to that account by the same writer.

psychologist's, or even professor of religious education's laboratory can the investigator take down a tiny flask and, holding it to the light, say, "This is the pure essence of religion." Metaphors, legends, incidents, human lives, all contain the essence of religion. The perfect religious symbol should be founded on an actual incident which has been retold, enjoyed, mulled over, and enriched by one generation after another, till it comes to enshrine the combined religious experience of thousands of different people who have added new point and application to it in the retelling. Manna is an almost perfect example of such a religious symbol, making its way through the lives of generations, changing them and being changed by them. Founded upon an actual experience, it has been used by one school of thought after another to give texture, picturesqueness, and substance to their religious teaching. The historical element gives to the common man what seems to him a firm foundation, while the root idea is deep, rich, and flexible enough to apply neatly to the new problems and conceptions of different kinds of ages and different types of people. Ethical pellets, scientifically pure, ad-

6 And Moses and Aaron said unto all the children of Israel, At even, then ye shall know that the LORD hath brought you out from the land of Egypt:

7 And in the morning, then ye shall see the glory of the LORD; for that he heareth your murmurings against the LORD: and what are we, that ye murmur against us?

8 And Moses said, This shall be, when the LORD shall give you in the evening flesh to eat, and in the morning bread to the full; for that the LORD heareth your murmurings which ye murmur against him: and what are we? your murmurings are not against us, but against the LORD.

9 ¶ And Moses spake unto Aaron, Say unto all the congregation of the children of Israel, Come near before the LORD: for he hath heard your murmurings.

10 And it came to pass, as Aaron spake unto the whole congregation of the children of Israel, that they looked toward the wilderness, and, behold, the glory of the LORD appeared in the cloud.

they gather daily." 6 So Moses and Aaron said to all the people of Israel, "At evening you shall know that it was the LORD who brought you out of the land of Egypt, 7 and in the morning you shall see the glory of the LORD, because he has heard your murmurings against the LORD. For what are we, that you murmur against us?" 8 And Moses said, "When the LORD gives you in the evening flesh to eat and in the morning bread to the full, because the LORD has heard your murmurings which you murmur against him — what are we? Your murmurings are not against us but against the LORD."

9 And Moses said to Aaron, "Say to the whole congregation of the people of Israel, 'Come near before the LORD, for he has heard your murmurings.'" 10 And as Aaron spoke to the whole congregation of the people of Israel, they looked toward the wilderness, and behold, the glory of the LORD

6-8. Moses and Aaron report the word of God to the people. The manna, actually a natural phenomenon in the desert, will be the mark of the presence of God: you shall see the glory. The leaders teach the people that their complaints against them (vs. 2) are actually complaints against Yahweh. He, not Moses and Aaron, is the object of their faith: he is their Lord. This reflects the growing tendency in later Judaism to make a wide separation between God and men. God is indeed with his people but not in their leaders.

9-12. In this section, originally preceding vs. 6-8, Moses asks Aaron to summon the congregation so that in their presence he may present the complaint to God. The appearance before the LORD points to a place at which God's will was communicated. The ark or the tent seems implied. Even though this account now stands before the Sinai ordinance of these appointments, they seem to be assumed (cf. vs. 33). In Num. 16:42 (Hebrew 17:7) the cloud and the glory were visible above the tent. The statement here that they looked toward the wilderness to behold the glory must be taken as an editor's attempt to harmonize the account with the pre-Sinai economy of worship.

The glory of the LORD is the mark of God's presence. It is not the presence itself. In the Judaism of the Targums the actual presence of God, in a localized manner, is ministered by enlightened professionals, do not nourish people as well as this natural food with all its irrelevancies.

The historical foundation: A sweet, sticky, honeylike juice exudes in heavy drops in May or June from a shrub found in the desert near which the people were wandering. It melts in the heat of the sun, after falling on the earth in grains. It has the flavor of honey. It is the natural juice of the shrub, but the Arabs believed that it fell from heaven with the dew. Samuel Johnson in his dictionary says: "It is but lately that the world were convinced of the mistake of manna being an aërial produce, covering a tree with sheets in the manna season, and the finding as much manna on it as on those which were open to the air" (see also Josephus Antiquities III. 1. 6).

It was something new which the children of Israel had not seen before (vs. 15); the account in Num. 11 does not seem to indicate that there was anything supernatural about it, but our story surrounds it with mystical qualities. The suggested derivation from mān hū', What is it?

11 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

12 I have heard the murmurings of the children of Israel: speak unto them, saying, At even ye shall eat flesh, and in the morning ye shall be filled with bread; and ye shall know that I am the LORD your God.

13 And it came to pass, that at even the quails came up, and covered the camp: and in the morning the dew lay round about the host.

14 And when the dew that lay was gone up, behold, upon the face of the wilderness there lay a small round thing, as small as the hoar frost on the ground.

appeared in the cloud. 11 And the LORD said to Moses, 12 "I have heard the murmurings of the people of Israel; say to them, 'At twilight you shall eat flesh, and in the morning you shall be filled with bread; then you shall know that I am the LORD your God.'"

13 In the evening quails came up and covered the camp; and in the morning dew lay round about the camp. 14 And when the dew had gone up, there was on the face of the wilderness a fine, flakelike thing, fine indicated by the term "Shekinah," but the biblical phrase the glory of the LORD is not equated with that term; it remains the mark or sign of the presence. In this case the cloud and the glory are perhaps the same in the sense that the former is the mark that constitutes the latter (cf. Num. 16:19, 42).

12. The quails are here associated with the gift of manna, though the narrative is exclusively preoccupied with the latter. The extensive account of the quails in Num. 11:1-35 assumes that the manna preceded the coming of the quails (vs. 5) and that the latter were a curse rather than a blessing (vs. 33). The Israelite meal that included meat was eaten in the evening. The purpose of the provision of the food is to confirm the people in their faith: then you shall know.

13. The quail is still a well-known migratory bird in the Egypt-Palestine region. In Num. 11:31 it is reported that the wind blew the birds in from the sea. They began coming in the evening and by morning they surrounded the camp at the distance of a day's journey. Here they are represented as flying over the camp. The quails are easily exhausted and the ease with which the Israelites are reported to have gathered them (Num. 11:32) is explained from that fact.

14. In the early summer several types of desert trees and shrubs, notably the tamarisk, exude a sweet sticky substance such as this appears to have been. It drips to the ground, crystallizes and turns white. The comparison which likens the manna to hoarfrost and the observation that it tasted "like wafers made with honey" (vs. 31) show that this material substance was the origin for the manna story. Instead of describing it as a flakelike thing the LXX here compares it to the coriander seed (cf. vs. 31), which is small, flat, and white.

is a popular sound-likeness (like the popular derivation of "sirloin" from the story that Henry VIII was so pleased with a loin of beef that he knighted it on the spot). Out of this historical incident the story has developed to become a religious symbol for many ages (see Exeg. on vs. 15). The mental and spiritual life of all who have used it has precipitated and crystallized in it. In vs. 4 it is said to be a test by which Yahweh is to prove the people, whether they will walk in my law, or no. The points which were progressively noted were that it must be gathered every day—it would not keep overnight; that in some way not clearly explained it was rationed, like food in wartime, so that the grasping individual could not get more than his share; though at the time, according to our story, neither the law of the sabbath, the Ark, nor the tables of the law existed, yet we are given the later additions to fit the story into the later institutions and regulations. So we see how the priestly writer has used the old story, modified it, and added to it in order to enforce the regulations of his day.

Some applications of the symbol of manna in later days may be noted:

(a) The petition in the Lord's Prayer, "Give us this day our daily bread." It is particularly evident in the case of food that we are not as a race self-sufficient, since the operations of sun

15 And when the children of Israel saw it, they said one to another, It is manna: for they wist not what it was. And Moses said unto them, This is the bread which the LORD hath given you to eat.

16 ¶ This is the thing which the LORD hath commanded, Gather of it every man according to his eating, an omer for every man, according to the number of your persons; take ye every man for them which are in his tents.

17 And the children of Israel did so, and gathered, some more, some less.

18 And when they did mete it with an omer, he that gathered much had nothing over, and he that gathered little had no lack; they gathered every man according to his eating.

as hoarfrost on the ground. 15 When the people of Israel saw it, they said to one another, "What is it?"^w For they did not know what it was. And Moses said to them, "It is the bread which the LORD has given you to eat. 16 This is what the LORD has commanded: 'Gather of it, every man of you, as much as he can eat; you shall take an omer apiece, according to the number of the persons whom each of you has in his tent.'" 17 And the people of Israel did so; they gathered, some more, some less. 18 But when they measured it with an omer, he that gathered much had nothing over, and he that gathered little had no lack; each gathered according to what he could eat.

^w Or It is manna. Heb man hu

15. The question "What is it?" is a translation of מן הוא. It could be translated "Is it mān?" or "It is mān." But it is unlikely that the pilgrims historically knew enough about natural life in the desert to make such statements. Besides, if such a translation were adopted, the following clause, for they did not know what it was, would have to be understood as meaning that the desert food had no relation to mān, the natural edible substance described in vs. 14. The question must be understood as another "popular etymology" which professes to explain how the food came to be called mān in Israel (vs. 31). The chief difficulty is that the word מן means "what" only in late Aramaic and Syriac. The normal Hebrew word for "what" is מה. The best conclusion is that the term mān, probably of Egyptian origin, was fitted into a popular etymological scheme by the use of an unusual pronoun. In Num. 11:5, 6, the LXX reads μάννα instead of μάν (Exod. 16:31, 33, 35). That is the basis for the English word "manna." The account lifts the natural phenomenon to the level of a sign confirming Israel's faith: It is the bread which the LORD has given. Beginning here and throughout the Bible and in Christian tradition "manna" becomes a metaphor for God's grace and providence.

16. An omer was about two quarts, one tenth of an ephah or bushel. It seems that as much as he can eat was estimated at about an omer per person.

17-18. The amazing thing was that despite the greed and fear of some, all had the same amount, just enough (cf. vs. 4). In II Cor. 8:15 Paul uses this account as a warrant for Christian sharing.

and rain are not in our hands. Our lives depend upon God. All bread is bread from heaven.

(b) Spiritual food, as in the sacraments, is as necessary to man's life as material food. "I have meat to eat that ye know not of" (John 4:32; see also John 6:31-35). So in secular life it is a wonder to see the peasants of Mexico, with hardly pesos enough to buy the bare necessities, save a few at the end of their day at the market to buy some flowers to bring home.

(c) There must be some regulations to prevent grasping individuals or nations from getting more than their share of the good things of this life. In wartime's scarcity, the poor family is able to get as much food at the store as the chauffeur sent down by the dowager duchess on the hill. War ration coupons are of divine origin, according to vs. 17-18.

(d) Filing systems have their defects: the used word is stale. The editor of a chain of trade papers was asked if he did not have huge stores of illustrations, references, stories, paragraphs in his office so that he could fill up every page of all these journals from them. He replied, "I have none; my motto is 'Every day the manna fell.'" He found, as every preacher finds sooner or later, that articles or sermons of scraps preserved in files lack the spontaneity of the fresh inspiration, the newly suggested illustration, the passing incident which God sends to 19 And Moses said, Let no man leave of it till the morning.

20 Notwithstanding they hearkened not unto Moses; but some of them left of it until the morning, and it bred worms, and stank: and Moses was wroth with them.

21 And they gathered it every morning, every man according to his eating: and when the sun waxed hot, it melted.

22 ¶ And it came to pass, that on the sixth day they gathered twice as much bread, two omers for one man: and all the rulers of the congregation came and told Moses.

19 And Moses said to them, "Let no man leave any of it till the morning." 20 But they did not listen to Moses; some left part of it till the morning, and it bred worms and became foul; and Moses was angry with them. 21 Morning by morning they gathered it, each as much as he could eat; but when the sun grew hot, it melted.

22 On the sixth day they gathered twice as much bread, two omers apiece; and when all the leaders of the congregation came 19-21. The command not to leave any of the manna until morning fits in with the Oriental custom of baking fresh bread each day. The statement that what was kept over became spoiled is in general harmony with conditions in a tropical climate. But the real purpose of the command is to remind the people that this daily gift of food is Yahweh's means of testing Israel and of teaching it to live in the constant dependence of faith (vs. 4). As in the case of the account of the plagues and of life in Egypt, this narrative is in general harmony with desert conditions, but its real concern is to attest God's universal freedom and power. To do this the narrators "develop" certain aspects of natural life until they seem "grotesque" when considered as sober fact. All the tamarisk trees in the entire wilderness could not possibly have provided such amounts of manna so regularly for "forty years" (vs. 35) as this account implies. Even if they had known this the narrators would not have been disturbed, for their concern is to drive home the point that God keeps Israel safe. As compared to Num. 11:6-9 (JE), this account has increased the element of fantasy, but the point is the same.

(1) INSTITUTION OF THE SABBATH (16:22-30)

The sabbath was an ancient institution in Israel (Gen. 29:27; Judg. 14:12; II Kings 4:23; 11:5-7; Isa. 1:13; Amos 8:5). It was in all probability observed also by pre-Mosaic Hebrews. The term may be a cognate of the Babylonian šapattu. On the Babylonian sabbath there was a cessation of activity. Sabbath days were considered to be days of evil. Originally the sabbath was an integral part of a lunar cultus. Though in Israel much of the cultus continued to be set according to a lunar calendar, this was no longer true of the sabbath, even in the biblical records. Separated from the lunar cycle, the sabbath had become a "secular" observance every seventh day. This account, relating the origin of the sabbath to the manna wonder, provides one more specific instance of the persistent tendency among Israel's historical interpreters to assimilate ancient cultic forms by providing them with a historical instead of a natural foundation.

22. The communication to Moses (vs. 5) had apparently not been shared with the people. In vs. 18 they were amazed that the amount gathered for each person came to just one omer. Here on Friday they are amazed that it comes to exactly two omers. The all to lighten life if they do but have eyes to see and ears to hear. A preacher's wife, as he leaves the house, lifts the baby boy out of his high chair, and says, "You are growing so fast, soon you will be lifting me," but the preacher, seeking for some classical book illustration for his address on the younger generation, does not see, does not hear; so the congregation dwindles.

22-30. Observance of the Sabbath.—A study of the Hebrew text indicates that the manna story has been pieced together from several sources—the original narrative has been edited and added to. The word in vs. 15 translated "what" is not Hebrew, but the later Aramaic. The "quails" in Num. 11 arrive after the giving of the law on Sinai. Probably the priestly writ-

23 And he said unto them, This is that which the LORD hath said, To-morrow is the rest of the holy sabbath unto the LORD: bake that which ye will bake to-day, and seethe that ye will seethe; and that which remaineth over lay up for you to be kept until the morning.

24 And they laid it up till the morning, as Moses bade: and it did not stink, neither was there any worm therein.

25 And Moses said, Eat that to-day; for to-day is a sabbath unto the LORD: to-day ye shall not find it in the field.

26 Six days ye shall gather it; but on the seventh day, which is the sabbath, in it there shall be none.

27 ¶ And it came to pass, that there went out some of the people on the seventh day for to gather, and they found none.

28 And the LORD said unto Moses, How long refuse ye to keep my commandments and my laws?

and told Moses, 23 he said to them, "This is what the LORD has commanded: 'Tomorrow is a day of solemn rest, a holy sabbath to the LORD; bake what you will bake and boil what you will boil, and all that is left over lay by to be kept till the morning.'"

24 So they laid it by till the morning, as Moses bade them; and it did not become foul, and there were no worms in it.

25 Moses said, "Eat it today, for today is a sabbath to the LORD; today you will not find it in the field. 26 Six days you shall gather it; but on the seventh day, which is a sabbath, there will be none." 27 On the seventh day some of the people went out to gather, and they found none.

28 And the LORD said to Moses, "How long do you refuse to keep my commandments and my leaders whom the writer cites as reporting the wonder to Moses probably reflect the organizational structure in Jerusalem after the Exile.

23. The explanation offered by Moses constitutes the sabbath decree. Shabbāthón, an emphatic term for sabbath in the late era, is the term translated a day of solemn rest. The last part of the verse is clearly concerned with the issue of preparing food for the sabbath on the previous day. Later manuals such as the tractate on the sabbath in the Mishnah greatly elaborate this provision.

24-27. The preservation of the manna until the sabbath vindicates Moses' institution of it as a holy day. Those who were faithless were disappointed.

28. The narrator clearly has a didactic concern. The protecting care of God comes to those who keep the sabbath laws, as attested by the double supply of manna. But now, as then, some refuse to keep the commandments, i.e., they are without faith in the exodus revelation.

ers found in telling the original story that it created the dangerous impression that the Israelites gathered manna on the sabbath, and so inserted a modification of the tale by which the manna did not fall on that day. Still later the modified narrative gave the impression that it was an account of the origin of the sabbath. Auditors objected that the people could not have lived on manna alone, so the quails were inserted to provide enough nourishment for the multitude. The old story was changed to suit conditions as they existed after the giving of the law on Sinai, and to meet objections which had been met with in retelling. As is indicated in Gen. 1:14, the origin of the seven-day week was in the stars (see Gen. 29:27; Judg. 14:12), and was familiar to the people of Israel in early times (see Exeg.). Its connection with moon and stars was forgotten in the growing religion of Yahweh. It became a day when man and beast could rest from their labors (23:12). All the burdensome sabbath regulations were developed later, but at first it was a holy day of rest (vss. 23, 29): so the people rested on the seventh day.

Thus an ancient superstitious custom was adapted by the religion of Yahweh to a religious and humanitarian use. The attitude of the missionaries of a new faith to the religious and superstitious customs of the people among whom they work has always been a difficult problem. One famous example is the work of one of the first Christian missionaries in China, Father Matteo Ricci, a Jesuit priest who entered 29 See, for that the LORD hath given you the sabbath, therefore he giveth you on the sixth day the bread of two days: abide ye every man in his place, let no man go out of his place on the seventh day.

30 So the people rested on the seventh day.

31 And the house of Israel called the name thereof Manna: and it was like coriander seed, white; and the taste of it was like wafers made with honey.

32 ¶ And Moses said, This is the thing which the LORD commandeth, Fill an omer of it to be kept for your generations; that they may see the bread wherewith I have fed you in the wilderness, when I brought you forth from the land of Egypt.

33 And Moses said unto Aaron, Take a pot, and put an omer full of manna therein, and lay it up before the LORD, to be kept for your generations.

laws? 29 See! The LORD has given you the sabbath, therefore on the sixth day he gives you bread for two days; remain every man of you in his place, let no man go out of his place on the seventh day." 30 So the people rested on the seventh day.

31 Now the house of Israel called its name manna; it was like coriander seed, white, and the taste of it was like wafers made with honey. 32 And Moses said, "This is what the LORD has commanded: 'Let an omer of it be kept throughout your generations, that they may see the bread with which I fed you in the wilderness, when I brought you out of the land of Egypt.'" 33 And Moses said to Aaron, "Take a jar, and put an omer of manna in it, and place it before the LORD, to be kept 29-31. As vs. 23 is the starting point for an elaboration of the rules for preparing for the sabbath, so vs. 29 is the basis for the many later laws relating to sabbath travel and activity.

(2) THE MEMORIAL MANNA (16:31-36)

32. The P writer affirms a tradition, no longer verifiable in his own day, that an omer of manna had been placed before the ark. His purpose was to remind Israel of God's presence and care in the desert.

33. The jar, described as of gold in the LXX, was to be set before the LORD. Moses asks Aaron to carry out the command.

the country in 1582. He held that a missionary must conform to the opinions and customs of the people he is sent to, provided they be not manifestly inconsistent with the faith he is commissioned to preach. . . . He must make use of whatever has the appearance of truth and piety in the religion of the country where he preaches, and endeavour to reconcile it to his own doctrine. . . . Whoever in China neglects the usual reverence to his ancestors, forfeits the character of an honest man and good citizen; and whoever neglects that paid to Confucius, forfeits all pretensions to public honours and employments. [So] he permitted his converts to reverence their ancestors and Confucius.²

The result was a long controversy with Rome ending in papal bulls forbidding the practice, although Pope Alexander had been inclined to agree with the Jesuit. In 1704 the holy office decreed "that christians should by no means assist at those sacrifices, which are offered in spring and autumn . . . to Confucius and their ancestors," and that the tablets of their ancestors should be removed from all Christian houses.³ Yet the adaptation of ancient superstitious customs to modern religious and humanitarian uses is a part of all religious growth throughout the ages (Mark 2:27), and can be studied in actual operation in country districts of Mexico today.

² Thomas Percy, ed., Miscellaneous Pieces Relating to the Chinese (London: R. & J. Dodsley, 1762), II, 15-16, 24, 28.

31-36. The Sacred Token of Remembrance.— In the light of all that the manna had meant for Israel, Moses bids Aaron, Take a pot, and put an omer full of manna therein, and lay it up before the LORD, to be kept for your generations . . . so Aaron laid it up before the Testimony. The Testimony is 'ēdhūth, the ark, before which or in which were also laid the two tables on which the law was inscribed.

Every church and every home should have such a museum to preserve the remembrance of things past. A great philosopher, fumbling in his pocket for a pencil, brought out a pebble.

³ Ibid., II, 52.

34 As the LORD commanded Moses, so Aaron laid it up before the Testimony, to be kept.

35 And the children of Israel did eat manna forty years, until they came to a land inhabited: they did eat manna, until they came unto the borders of the land of Canaan.

36 Now an omer is the tenth part of an ephah.

17 And all the congregation of the children of Israel journeyed from the wilderness of Sin, after their journeys, according to the commandment of the LORD, and pitched in Rephidim: and there was no water for the people to drink.

throughout your generations." 34 As the LORD commanded Moses, so Aaron placed it before the Testimony, to be kept. 35 And the people of Israel ate the manna forty years, till they came to a habitable land; they ate the manna, till they came to the border of the land of Canaan. 36 (An omer is the tenth part of an ephah.)

17 All the congregation of the people of Israel moved on from the wilderness of Sin by stages, according to the commandment of the LORD, and camped at Reph'idim; but there was no water for the

34. It is said that Aaron placed the jar before the Testimony, i.e., before the ark. Num. 17:10 (=Hebrew 17:25) reports that Aaron's rod was also kept there. Heb. 9:4 reports that both the rod and the (golden) pot of manna, together with the tablets of the Lord (25:16), were in the ark rather than before it.

c) MASSAH-MERIBAH (17:1-7)

This is the second of three accounts of murmuring caused by thirst (cf. 15:22-27; Num. 20:1-13): Marah-Massah, Massah-Meribah, and Meribah-Kadesh. It is possible, though not demonstrable, that all three accounts rest on a single occurrence. In all three the main issue is faith versus disobedience. They seem to present transgression as an ever-deeper evil in Israel. In the first account (15:22-27) Yahweh provides Israel with a law or statute by which to test its faithfulness toward him. This account features the spirit of rebellion in the people. The third account (Num. 20:1-13 [P]) cites Moses' own lack of faith.

17:1. Day by day the Israelites travel at the commandment of the LORD (cf. Num. 10:33-36). The location of Rephidim is unknown. It should probably be sought in the

He looked at it and smiled, "My little boy picked that up and gave it to me on our last walk before I left home, and I have carried it around the world ever since." The baby's first shoes, the first report cards with "A" for effort, the broken vase, the rag doll—of such trifles are the riches of a home museum made; an old church has one of the original warming pans for the cold feet of the unheated congregation, the old bass viol, the hourglass that ran for forty-five minutes and was sometimes turned twice in the sermon. Real piety is connected with such trifles. Progress forgets that the discarded may be interesting in twenty years.

So long thy power hath blest me, sure it still Will lead me on.⁴

That is what the pot of manna in the ark meant.

17:1-6. Water from the Rock.—The scene at Rephidim has greatly impressed the imagination of the world. The Arabs show at Petra a Moses Spring, which they identify with that spirited out of the rock by the sacred rod (see Exeg. on vs. 1, 6). There is an ancient belief, still current enough to have articles upon it written in The Hibbert Journal, etc., that certain people have the skill by a magic staff or wand to find water in dry lands (see Num. 21:18). W. F. Barrett was satisfied that the skill does exist among certain individuals who are especially gifted, though otherwise generally simple and unsophisticated. Like the homing instinct in birds, he thinks, the dowser's power lies beneath the level of conscious perception.

⁴ John Henry Newman, "Lead, Kindly Light."

To the average reader the scene has been interpreted to mean that there is no such thing in life as an impossible situation: one has only to attack his problem with faith in its possible solution and by God's help there is always a noble way out, satisfying to the soul. As the old automobile guides used to say so often, "End of road; turn right." There is a right turn at 2 Wherefore the people did chide with Moses, and said, Give us water that we may drink. And Moses said unto them, Why chide ye with me? wherefore do ye tempt the LORD?

3 And the people thirsted there for water; and the people murmured against Moses, and said, Wherefore is this that thou hast brought us up out of Egypt, to kill us and our children and our cattle with thirst?

4 And Moses cried unto the LORD, saying, What shall I do unto this people? they be almost ready to stone me.

people to drink. 2 Therefore the people found fault with Moses, and said, "Give us water to drink." And Moses said to them, "Why do you find fault with me? Why do you put the LORD to the proof?" 3 But the people thirsted there for water, and the people murmured against Moses, and said, "Why did you bring us up out of Egypt, to kill us and our children and our cattle with thirst?" 4 So Moses cried to the LORD, "What shall I do with this people? They are almost general region of Kadesh (Num. 20:1), near which Mount Horeb must also be looked for. The Amalekites (vs. 8), who here attacked Israel, lived in this Negeb area and not at the lower end of the peninsula where the old Sinai tradition has caused explorers to look for this stopping place.

2. The faultfinding with Moses (ריב) has the nature of a legal argument. The people challenged Moses to justify his leadership by providing water; rather, they insist their thirst denies the validity of his position. The contention, says Moses, is tantamount to putting the LORD to the proof (cf. 16:7-8). The Hebrew verb nāṣāh means "to test," "to see" (or "to doubt") whether one will act in a certain way. It does not imply provoking one to act in a certain way, as the English verb tempt (KJV) now does.

3. This verse repeats in other words what has been said in vss. 1bβ-2. Two sources seem to have been woven together and vss. 4-5 continue vs. 3.

4. Stoning was a recognized form of mob action (I Sam. 30:6). The impatient petulance and self-pity of Moses (cf. Num. 11:10-15; 20:10 [?]) recorded here is balanced by citations of his capacity for self-effacement and pity (32:32-33).

the end of every road if one has but faith and perseverance to find it. It seemed, and was actually said in print, in 1922 that Franklin D. Roosevelt's political aspirations had been brought to an untimely close in 1921 when he was stricken by infantile paralysis which left him a cripple. The examination paper of life may set a question which you know you cannot answer, but do not be so sure about that: keep looking at it, thinking about it, and lo, from somewhere within long forgotten memories and ideas will begin to stir. On the lawn outside the robins are having hard picking as they seek for worms. One fellow gazes despairingly down a dead hole. He thinks he will give it up; there is nothing there. But on second thought he returns to it and begins to peck at it, idly at first, then with growing excitement, and before this sentence is finished, he has extracted from it one of the juiciest and most satisfying worms he ever tasted in his life! The threshold of religion is at that point where the thirsty soul stands squarely in front of the hopeless barren rock, the seemingly impossible. One may use mystic psychological words and say that he did not despair but began to draw upon unexpected inner resources, or one may openly say, as Exodus does, The LORD said unto Moses.

1-4. The Cry for God.—The poignancy of this passage, and especially of the words, And Moses cried unto the LORD, is illustrated in The Green Pastures, "You's with me, ain't you, Lawd?"⁵

4-7. Is the LORD Among Us or Not?—The people are thirsty in the desert. They come to Moses and demand that he justify his leadership by producing water; Moses appeals to God to help him in this emergency, and God shows him how to produce water miraculously out of the rock. It is not necessary to expound this episode on the basis of the supposition that God worked differently in those days from the way he operates now. Yet preaching becomes unreal and sentimental when one ignores the fact that many thousands of believing people in our days have died in the agonies of thirst and want, even while praying for succor to God just as earnestly as the Israelites and Moses ever did. From Moses' administrative point of view it showed hardness of heart and lack of faith to ask, Is the LORD among us or not? In our days

⁵ Marc Connelly (New York: Farrar & Rinehart, 1929), Part II, scene 4, p. 144.

5 And the LORD said unto Moses, Go on before the people, and take with thee of the elders of Israel; and thy rod, wherewith thou smotest the river, take in thine hand, and go.

6 Behold, I will stand before thee there upon the rock in Horeb; and thou shalt smite the rock, and there shall come water out of it, that the people may drink. And Moses did so in the sight of the elders of Israel.

7 And he called the name of the place Massah, and Meribah, because of the chiding of the children of Israel, and because they tempted the LORD, saying, Is the LORD among us, or not?

8 ¶ Then came Amalek, and fought with Israel in Rephidim.

ready to stone me." 5 And the LORD said to Moses, "Pass on before the people, taking with you some of the elders of Israel; and take in your hand the rod with which you struck the Nile, and go. 6 Behold, I will stand before you there on the rock at Horeb; and you shall strike the rock, and water shall come out of it, that the people may drink." And Moses did so, in the sight of the elders of Israel. 7 And he called the name of the place Massah* and Mer'ibah,^y because of the faultfinding of the children of Israel, and because they put the LORD to the proof by saying, "Is the LORD among us or not?"

8 Then came Am'alek and fought with

* That is Proof

^y That is Contention

5. The writer assumes that the rod with which Moses struck the Nile (7:17, 20) is lying "before the Lord," and that Moses took it from there (Num. 17:10). It seems that some place, now missing, must have been mentioned after the concluding words and go. That would have provided the adverb there in vs. 6 with an antecedent.

6. The assurance, I will stand before you, is a strikingly effective anthropomorphism assuring Moses of Yahweh's presence and power there. The Mekilta (ad loc.) offers the following interpretation of this, "God said to him: Wherever you find the mark of man's feet, there am I before thee." The commentator seems to shy away from the metaphor of his text. The reference is, it seems, to a particular rock on Mount Horeb. It is so interpreted by Josephus (Antiquities III. 1. 7). However, Targ. Onkelos, on Num. 21:17, reports that the rock Moses struck thereafter followed Israel on its pilgrimage to provide it with water. In I Cor. 10:4, Paul reveals his knowledge of this legend and seems to take it seriously, "The supernatural Rock which followed them."

7. The place was named Massah and Meribah to signify the two ways Israel had shown its lack of faith. "The waters of Meribah" are identified with Kadesh (Num. 20:13 [sanctified]; 27:14; Ezek. 48:28). Massah and Meribah became synonymous with "hardness of heart" and faithlessness (Deut. 6:16; 9:22; 33:8; Ps. 95:8).

d) THE AMALEKITES (17:8-16)

The story of the Amalekite attack typifies the military crises Israel encountered on its pilgrimage, comparable to the crises of hunger and thirst. However, the real issue we admit our hardness of heart and lack of faith and we do ask this question. We read this episode and wonder why such miracles seldom if ever happen today. Then it may dawn upon us that these verses are not meant to be read as literal history, but rather as a pictorial illustration of deeper spiritual truth in a setting not merely of the present moment but of the past and future eternities. God does not promise to give people what they want, but he does promise to satisfy abundantly those who trust in him. This incident is an old folk tale expressing in a popular way a truth which can be tested in personal experience by every believer, but which cannot receive its objective proof till the secrets of all hearts are known at last. Hot for certainty, we demand a proof of God in an incident, in an instant; but one cannot prove God, one can only know him, and that only gradually in a lifelong friendship, the perpetual happy surprises of the years ever adding new wonder to our knowledge of the ways of him we love.

8-16. The Prevailing Hands of Moses.—Joshua, traditionally a descendant of the great national hero Joseph, is chosen to be the general in charge of the first battle against Amalek, a tribe with which the Israelites had to do a good deal of fighting. Moses himself does not enter

9 And Moses said unto Joshua, Choose us out men, and go out, fight with Amalek: to-morrow I will stand on the top of the hill with the rod of God in mine hand.

10 So Joshua did as Moses had said to him, and fought with Amalek: and Moses, Aaron, and Hur went up to the top of the hill.

11 And it came to pass, when Moses held up his hand, that Israel prevailed: and when he let down his hand, Amalek prevailed.

Israel at Reph'idim. 9 And Moses said to Joshua, "Choose for us men, and go out, fight with Am'alek; tomorrow I will stand on the top of the hill with the rod of God in my hand." 10 So Joshua did as Moses told him, and fought with Am'alek; and Moses, Aaron, and Hur went up to the top of the hill. 11 Whenever Moses held up his hand, Israel prevailed; and whenever he lowered here, for the writers, is not Israel's faith. Their actual concern is etiological. They want to account for and keep alive the ancient and bitter feud between Israel and Amalek.

8. The Amalekites were related to the Edomites (Gen. 36:12). Like Edom, they were an older people than Israel (Num. 24:20). They lived just to the north of Kadesh, probably claiming that oasis (Gen. 14:7; Num. 14:25). Israel's historians list them, together with Amorites, Hittites, Jebusites, and Canaanites as among the population of Palestine (Num. 13:29; 14:25, 43, 45). The suggestion of Ernst Sellin (Geschichte des israelitisch-jüdischen Volkes [Leipzig: Quelle & Meyer, 1924], I, 69-70) that the Amalekites fought Israel for the possession of Kadesh seems very plausible.

9. Joshua is here presented, without introduction, as the chief warrior. In 33:11 he is presented as Moses' personal servant, "a young man" (cf. 24:13; 32:17; Num. 11:28). It is probable, therefore, that our present account once stood toward the end of the Moses stories. Moses seems to play the role of thaumaturge; he is the conjurer who assures victory. Defeat by oath and imprecation was considered normal (Num. 22:6); Bentzen (Intro. to O.T., I, 139) lists vs. 16 as a sample of the literary type known as the oath or "conjuring song" (cf. Josh. 10:12-13; I Sam. 14:24). Moses takes with him the rod of God he had carried to Egypt (4:20).

10. The Bible offers us no further information about Hur. Josephus (Antiquities III. 2. 4) speaks of him as the husband of Miriam.

11. The Samar. and the LXX texts state that Moses lifted up both hands. This seems more probable in view of the picture in the next verse.

the fight, but stands above the battle with hands outstretched, invoking the power of Yahweh. When his strength fails him, his arms are supported by Aaron, his brother, and Hur, traditionally the husband of his sister Miriam. As he so stands and later is seated on a rock on a hill above the conflict, he can be clearly seen against the sky by the fighting people. Moses with arms outstretched is perhaps the first example in the Bible of the symbolic use of the cross (though cf. Exeg.), a figure employed by nearly all peoples in their early expression of thought and feeling. It is found among the pre-Christian symbols in India, China, Egypt, Greece, among the Gauls, in Mexico, and among the pictographs of the Dakotas. Two origins may be suggested for the use of this symbol: the horizontal cross may derive from the crossroads, the place of doubt and decision, where in early folklore crowds of good and evil spirits assembled to guide or betray the traveler on his way; the vertical cross as the meeting of the ideal and the every day, the intersection of the divine and the human. In Moses this upright form is indeed a marvelous picture of prayer, bringing divine power into human affairs, prophetic of John 12:32; 19:18.

The hands of Moses had already become a symbol to this people. Through them the power of God had manifested itself. Moses had stretched them out, and through the plagues the people had been freed from slavery; the sea had been divided; they had been delivered from dying by thirst and hunger. Now Moses' hands bring power for victory in battle. When Amalek pressed forward, Moses' faith failed. He doubted if they could win. His hands fell and Israel lost courage till his kinsmen came to help his failing faith. In all past emergencies God had delivered, or God and Moses had delivered, by miracle.

12 But Moses' hands were heavy; and they took a stone, and put it under him, and he sat thereon; and Aaron and Hur stayed up his hands, the one on the one side, and the other on the other side; and his hands were steady until the going down of the sun.

13 And Joshua discomfited Amalek and his people with the edge of the sword.

his hand, Am'alek prevailed. 12 But Moses' hands grew weary; so they took a stone and put it under him, and he sat upon it, and Aaron and Hur held up his hands, one on one side, and the other on the other side; so his hands were steady until the going down of the sun. 13 And Joshua mowed down Am'alek and his people with the edge of the sword.

12. Moses assumes a specific corporal posture to insure a desired result (cf. I Kings 18:42). This is not a sign of prayer in our sense of the term. The hand or arm is the sign of power (Gen. 31:29; Mic. 2:1); and the outstretched hands of Moses communicate the divine power. The motion is not just symbolic but intrinsically effective in the same sense as the words of an oath or the acted parables of the prophets were considered to be effective. Whether his arms were stretched upward vertically, or outward horizontally, is not clear. Beer (Exodus, p. 93) thinks that they were held outward horizontally, so that the silhouette of Moses made the sign of the cross. He asserts that the sign of Cain (Gen. 4:15) and the mark placed on the foreheads of those to be saved (Ezek. 9:4) were also the cross. However it is not Moses' total silhouette but his outstretched arms, communicating the power of Yahweh, that are featured.

13-14. Thanks to the aid of Yahweh, Joshua won the battle which, we may assume, enabled Israel to hold Kadesh. The "eternal war" is now ordained. God himself will utterly blot out the remembrance of Amalek; no one must remain alive to utter the name of the ancient ancestor. Deut. 25:18 repeats the command and explains the reason. The oracles of Balaam (Num. 24:20*b*) repeat the prediction. Because he mitigated the sharpness of the command in one small way, Saul lost the favor of Yahweh (I Sam. 15) through his disobedience. David remembered the injunction (I Sam. 27:8; 30:1). The last remnant of the Amalekites seems to have been annihilated in the days of Hezekiah about five centuries later (I Chr. 4:41-43). To write down the command increases its lasting validity.

Now came the greater miracle, the infusion of faith into the people themselves as they struggled in battle. As ancient sayings have it, "The greatest miracle of God is the faith of Israel."

The idea that certain people by their intercession can protect and inspire others in time of need is central in religious experience. They themselves would say that all they can do is to make themselves channels by which God's power is made available to these other people. This is one of the most valuable and (as is true of most valuable things) most dangerous of religious ideas. It is dangerous when certain people are set apart professionally to spend all their lives in seclusion praying for the world, for all prayer is the by-product of an active, practical life; and a life devoted entirely to prayer (while a sentimental symbol for others) is in itself not conducive to real prayer at all. As Meister Eckhart mystically says, "Mary was Martha before she was Mary."⁶ It is dangerous when the prayers aim to make other people "God's pets," because they are being prayed for. During the blitz in World War II an old woman in London had escaped, while all the lower part of her street had been demolished with much loss of life. The rector called next morning, and she said, "I never prayed so hard in my life as I did last night. Every bomb I heard coming I prayed hard and pushed it farther down the street. I can never thank God enough." The rector said, "Yes, but wasn't it rather hard on the folk who live at the other end of your street?" She said, "Oh, they should have prayed as hard as I did and pushed it right out into the sea." Now prayer may not change the trajectory of a bomb (at least with our present knowledge such an idea is incapable of proof or disproof, and is so alien to our conceptions that we are apt to scoff at the idea), but at least the fact that she had to pray kept her in her house, and the naïveté of her religious faith may have saved her life. Otherwise she thought just as Moses did on the hill, "It is quite fair to pray this way: to lift up one's hands for one's own."

14. A Memorial in a Book.—This note by an editor may have been the origin of the legend

⁶ Pfeiffer, Meister Eckhart, II, 97.

14 And the LORD said unto Moses, Write this for a memorial in a book, and rehearse it in the ears of Joshua: for I will utterly put out the remembrance of Amalek from under heaven.

15 And Moses built an altar, and called the name of it Jehovah-nissi:

16 For he said, Because the LORD hath sworn that the LORD will have war with Amalek from generation to generation.

18 When Jethro, the priest of Midian, Moses' father-in-law, heard of all that God had done for Moses, and for Israel his

14 And the LORD said to Moses, "Write this as a memorial in a book and recite it in the ears of Joshua, that I will utterly blot out the remembrance of Am'alek from under heaven." 15 And Moses built an altar and called the name of it, The LORD is my banner, 16 saying, "A hand upon the banner of the LORD! The LORD will have war with Am'alek from generation to generation."

18 Jethro, the priest of Mid'ian, Moses' father-in-law, heard of all that God

* Cn. Heb obscure

15. This reference to the altar Moses built may represent an attempt to explain the existence of a shrine at Kadesh, just as in the patriarchal stories Canaanite centers of worship, notably Hebron and Bethel, are said to have been founded by the fathers, Abraham and Jacob. The phrase Yahweh-nissi can mean "standard," banner, or "sign." The last term seems intended here. The "sign" must be understood as intrinsically effective, i.e., "Yahweh is the one who does things for me." Josephus (Antiquities III. 2. 5) interpreted the phrase as "the Lord the Conqueror." The LXX reads it as "my refuge."

16. The writer draws the scene of the oath in which Moses first pledged perpetual war against Amalek. The Hebrew reads "throne" rather than banner. From generation to generation the faithful Israelite, with his hand on the altar, the throne of Yahweh, was to swear perpetual war on Amalek until finally Amalek should be no more.

2. JETHRO VISITS MOSES (18:1-27)

This account of Jethro's visit must be supplemented by Num. 10:29-36; 11:11-17, 24-30. The story of Jethro's visit is of unusual interest because it is the focal point of the "Kenite hypothesis" (see Intro., pp. 839-40).

that Moses was the author of the first five books of the Bible; the idea is developed in 24:4; Num. 33:2; Deut. 31:9. English dictionaries up to the end of the seventeenth century attributed these books to Moses and also the book of Job. The KJV calls the first five books "The First Book of Moses," "The Second Book of Moses," and so on. The practice of ascribing works to great authors who had not written them was common in antiquity, and was due to simplicity rather than to any desire to deceive. Perhaps it was the earliest appearance of the advertising spirit.

15-16. The Altar of War.—This would seem to be the sacred stone on which Moses sat during the battle. It was a royal throne for Yahweh, who had conquered. The words THE LORD hath sworn are a guess by the translators at the meaning of Hebrew words which seem to be "a hand upon the throne of Yahweh." These words seem rather to refer to Moses' hand which was held up from the throne during the battle, that hand which, holding the rod, had worked such wonders for the people (see Expos. on vs. 8-16).

The altar is also to be a memorial of vengeance against Amalek. (This hatred runs all through the Hebrew story; see Deut. 25:17; I Sam. 15; 27:8; 30:1 ff.; I Chr. 4:42-43.) As such, the altar or stone is one of the early examples of the fostering of war by keeping ancient wrongs in remembrance and exploiting the dislike of people for other people with customs different from their own. The treaty stone in Limerick preserved by the Irish as a remembrance of the alleged perfidy of the English, the German "Hymn of Hate" in World War I, the square in Budapest in which burned four eternal lights dedicated to the recovery from its dishonest neighbors of its stolen territory, all these are examples of this same attempt to perpetuate an ancient hate. The Statue of Liberty in New York Harbor, a gift from France to the United States, and hundreds of schools and hospitals over the world, gifts of the great foundations and missionary societies of the United States, are better altars to God.

18:1-6. Moses' Wife.—The text of vs. 2 is obscure, but seems to mean that whereas in 4:20 Moses had taken his wife and sons to people, and that the LORD had brought Israel out of Egypt;

2 Then Jethro, Moses' father-in-law, took Zipporah, Moses' wife, after he had sent her back,

3 And her two sons; of which the name of the one was Gershom; for he said, I have been an alien in a strange land:

4 And the name of the other was Eliezer; for the God of my father, said he, was mine help, and delivered me from the sword of Pharaoh:

5 And Jethro, Moses' father-in-law, came with his sons and his wife unto Moses into the wilderness, where he encamped at the mount of God:

6 And he said unto Moses, I thy father-in-law Jethro am come unto thee, and thy wife, and her two sons with her.

7 ¶ And Moses went out to meet his father-in-law, and did obeisance, and kissed him; and they asked each other of their welfare; and they came into the tent.

had done for Moses and for Israel his people, how the LORD had brought Israel out of Egypt. 2 Now Jethro, Moses' father-in-law, had taken Zippo'rah, Moses' wife, after he had sent her away, 3 and her two sons, of whom the name of the one was Gershom (for he said, "I have been a sojourner^a in a foreign land"), 4 and the name of the other, Elie'zer^b (for he said, "The God of my father was my help, and delivered me from the sword of Pharaoh"). 5 And Jethro, Moses' father-in-law, came with his sons and his wife to Moses in the wilderness where he was encamped at the mountain of God. 6 And when one told Moses, "Lo,^c your father-in-law Jethro is coming to you with your wife and her two sons with her," 7 Moses went out to meet his father-in-law, and did obeisance and kissed him; and they asked each other of their welfare, and went

^a Heb ger

^b Heb Eli, my God, ezer, help

^c Sam Gk Syr: Heb I

a) THE SACRIFICIAL MEAL (18:1-12)

18:1. What Jethro heard was how the LORD had brought Israel out of Egypt. But, characteristically, late Jewish tradition (cf. Mekilta, ad loc.) said that the occasion on which the report of the great deed of Yahweh came to Jethro was the giving of the law of Sinai. The same Taanitic record interprets the phrase priest of Midian as "priest of idolatry." We are actually never told whose priest Jethro is.

2-4. These verses seek to reconcile the following verse with 2:22; 4:20, 25 (cf. above). Later tradition reported that Moses had sent back his wife at Aaron's request. Eliezer means "God is help." The popular "etymology" is, as usual, a later development.

5. For Gressmann and others who consider this chapter part of a Kadesh cycle the last half of this verse is a late editorial addition attempting to harmonize the account with the Sinai tradition.

6-7. The RSV has improved the translation by following the Samar. text, the LXX, and the Syriac. It might well have followed the last two on the first word also and read,

Egypt, yet he later had sent them back to her father. This is the last time Zipporah is mentioned. It is hard to be the wife of a famous man. No one seems to take any notice of Zipporah or her sons after these three are mentioned in vs. 6. The best wives seem to like it this way, so that they can cherish (as a secret too sacred to be profaned by common knowledge) the truth of their real power. But there have been instances in modern times of women whose public service has been as great as that of their distinguished husbands. Most historians have been men, so that men have come to have an exaggerated opinion of their own importance in history; and human mores in the past have been dominated by a church whose officers were wholly male and largely celibate, so that woman is just beginning to get her chance. She is learning not to accept man's view of woman as the whole truth, and to see that it is a mistake to take at their face value either his views of himself or of her. Nothing is known about Zipporah, but the Talmud says with creative remembrance that Moses turned first of all to the women when he needed help in making the people obey the law; for he said, "Adam would never have sinned, if God had only given Eve the directions instead of Adam," thus showing how much he had learned from Zipporah of the wisdom and tact of women.

7-12. Jethro and Moses.—This passage, with its climactic statement, Jethro . . . offered a

8 And Moses told his father-in-law all that the LORD had done unto Pharaoh and to the Egyptians for Israel's sake, and all the travail that had come upon them by the way, and how the LORD delivered them.

9 And Jethro rejoiced for all the goodness which the LORD had done to Israel, whom he had delivered out of the hand of the Egyptians.

10 And Jethro said, Blessed be the LORD, who hath delivered you out of the hand of the Egyptians, and out of the hand of Pharaoh, who hath delivered the people from under the hand of the Egyptians.

into the tent. 8 Then Moses told his father-in-law all that the LORD had done to Pharaoh and to the Egyptians for Israel's sake, all the hardship that had come upon them in the way, and how the LORD had delivered them. 9 And Jethro rejoiced for all the good which the LORD had done to Israel, in that he had delivered them out of the hand of the Egyptians.

10 And Jethro said, "Blessed be the LORD, who has delivered you out of the hand of the Egyptians and out of the hand

"It was reported," i.e., an emissary from Jethro came to announce the coming of Jethro. Moses greeted his elder in appropriate and formal Oriental manner. The Hebrew word behind welfare is the word normally translated "peace."

8-9. After the reunion Moses invited (Samar.) Jethro into his tent and gave him an account of the great acts of Yahweh both in Egypt and in the desert. This recital of the acts of divine care in story, psalm, and ritual was always a standard practice in Israel. The Hebrew text says that Jethro rejoiced, but the LXX reports that he was "astonished," or overcome, by the news. It stresses the notion that if Jethro knew Yahweh at all before this, he now learned something decisively new about him.

10. That a non-Israelite might bless the God of Israel, whether he had known him before or not, was considered possible (Dan. 3:28; II Kings 5:15-17). Opponents of the Kenite hypothesis interpret this verse as marking a pagan's acknowledgment of the true God or of his conversion to him. Mekilta (ad loc.) says that this is the point at which Jethro freed himself from idolatry and acquired torah. The acceptance of the traditional interpretation of this verse and the rejection of a reconstruction such as Gressmann's (cf. Intro., pp. 839-40) have too often proceeded from the dogmatic assumption that to affirm the uniqueness and truth of Israel's faith we must rule out its genetic and phenomenological relation to its wider environment. Our study of the book of Exodus burnt offering and sacrifices to God, has been explained in three different ways. (a) That this feast was celebrated by Jethro, the priest of Midian, in honor of Yahweh, who had done such wondrous things for Moses, the husband of Zipporah. That it was a feast in which, by eating together, the invited Hebrews were admitted, according to custom, to blood kinship with the Midianites. Moses was not mentioned as among those invited, perhaps because he, by marriage, was already blood kin to the Midianites (see Exeg. for another explanation). Although priest of the gods of Midian, Jethro already knew that Yahweh was greater than all gods. The feast in this case was a wonderful example of courtesy and religious tolerance. One is reminded of II Kings 5:18-19.

(b) That Jethro had become a convert to the religion of Yahweh and had been ordained a priest in his worship. Ancient legend adds details to emphasize the joy of God over his conversion, that when he approached the altar manna began to fall around him as a blessing from heaven.

(c) That the omission of the name of Moses from the list of those bidden to the feast indicates that a sentence has been dropped from the text, as not being approved by later scribes. In this case, Jethro had always been a priest of Yahweh in Midian. He came to instruct Moses in two departments, (i) how a sacrifice to Yahweh should be offered, and (ii) how judicial affairs should be arranged. Later writers did not like the idea of their great leader being instructed in the worship of Yahweh by a Midianite, and dropped that statement. If this surmise is correct, it is evident that Sinai and its environs were in the diocese of Jethro. Yahweh may originally have been the god in this particular district, particularly of the sacred moun-

11 Now I know that the LORD is greater than all gods: for in the thing wherein they dealt proudly he was above them.

12 And Jethro, Moses' father-in-law, took a burnt offering and sacrifices for God: and Aaron came, and all the elders of Israel, to eat bread with Moses' father-in-law before God.

of Pharaoh. 11 Now I know that the LORD is greater than all gods, because he delivered the people from under the hand of the Egyptians,^d when they dealt arrogantly with them." 12 And Jethro, Moses' father-in-law, offered^e a burnt offering and sacrifices to God; and Aaron came with all the elders of Israel to eat bread with Moses' father-in-law before God.

^d Transposing the last clause of v. 10 to v. 11

^e Syr Tg Vg: Heb took

leads us to the conclusion that such an assumption is invalid in that it contradicts the nature of revelation presupposed by the bulk of the biblical testimony. It implies an account of revelation that is gnostic rather than biblical.

11. The meaning of Jethro's statement seems to be that this story of the insolence of Egypt against the Israelites and the deliverance of the latter had convinced him of the power of Israel's God.

12. The word took, in contrast to the expressions found in the Syriac and Targ., is not the technical term used for bringing a sacrifice. It is a neutral word. Paul Heinisch (Das Buch Exodus [Bonn: Peter Hanstein, 1934], p. 141) says that the word is employed purposely to indicate that the sacrifice was not valid from the point of view of the Mosaic law. Jethro, he adds, offered a sacrifice to his own god, not to Yahweh. But that is difficult to maintain in view of vss. 10-11. Heinisch adds that Moses and Aaron could come to the sacrifice without scruples since, from their point of view, Jethro's sacrifice to his god was in effect a sacrifice to Yahweh, because he offered it to the God who delivered Israel. This shows a capacity for subtle casuistry rather than for an appreciation of the spirit of the account itself.

It should be noted that Aaron came with all the elders. Moses is not mentioned. Beer (Exodus, p. 95) interprets this to imply that Moses was already privy to the cultic rite of which Jethro was the custodian and teacher, and that Moses had been initiated as a refugee. According to such a view this is the occasion of the initiation of the others.

The chief part of the sacrifice is a sacred meal consumed by the group before God (cf. 24:9-11). Both in Palestine and in the Negeb the "high places" at which such sacrifices were offered are still extant. A rectangular area on top of a natural rock was smoothed off. At one end a somewhat higher rock surface sometimes projected slightly tain of Sinai. Moses first learned about Yahweh in the home of his father-in-law, and it was while there that Yahweh revealed himself to Moses in the burning bush. This last explanation seems to be the most probable (yet cf. Exeg. on vss. 1-27; 19:1). In those happy years after his marriage, when he was out all day with Jethro's herds, he would come home in the evening to his wife and babes, and to long talks about Yahweh, the God of the country round about, the God of whom Jethro was the priest. He found himself when he dared to stand up for his oppressed brothers; he found love when he met Zipporah; in the experience of home and children, in converse with a good man, in meditation alone among the flocks, he found

God. It was not a strange, far-off god of deducted argument, it was the God of the country where he lived and worked, the God of the home where he lived; he found God in the ways of his children, in the love of his wife, in the talk with her father, in his curiosity about the trees and the thunderstorms around Sinai. And now Jethro had come to instruct him in the ancient lore of religious ritual, and make him too a priest of Yahweh.

There are grounds for holding that Moses was the first to call the God of Israel by the name Yahweh (but cf. Exeg. on vss. 1-27); that he had learned from his father-in-law about this God of the country; that his name was revealed to Israel through Moses about the time when 13 ¶ And it came to pass on the morrow, that Moses sat to judge the people: and the people stood by Moses from the morning unto the evening.

13 On the morrow Moses sat to judge the people, and the people stood about into the rectangle: it represented the seat of the deity before whom the brotherhood gathered. Those who shared in the feast reclined along the sides and at the lower end of the rectangle. An altar on which certain parts of victims were burned, and at which libations were poured out, stood to one side of the rectangular place (Volz, Biblischen Altertümer, p. 22 and plate opposite). A striking picture of such a meal is given in the account of the choice of Saul as king (cf. I Sam. 9:11-14).

b) APPOINTMENT OF JUDGES (18:13-26)

This section tells us that the civil organization of Israel's society in a later day was founded by Moses, under Jethro's instruction. The account is both etiological and historical in purpose. In Num. 11:11-17, 24-30, later followed by the Deuteronomist (Deut. 1:9-18), Moses himself is said to have found the burden of his work too heavy; and the foundation of the more differentiated administration is represented as having been ordained by God, without any reference to Jethro.

13. The function of Moses was comparable to that of the Bedouin tribal sheik today. Each morning such a sheik "sits" briefly as judge. As Israel gradually became an ever-greater aggregate of clan and tribal units such simple judicial administration by one man became impossible. Moses may here be considered as priest as well as tribal chief or judge. Originally there was no differentiation between the sacral and civil power (cf. Bentzen, Intro. to O.T., I, 215-16). This incident is part of a continual process of differentiation in which sacral and secular authorities become more separable. But they do not stand completely apart. The civil judges receive their authority from Moses, the sacral head. Besides, the oracular decision, whether by sacred lot or prophetic inspiration, constitutes the "precedents" on the basis of which the "civil" magistrates work.

the people were moved by great devoutness after the crossing of the Red Sea. The first name we find derived from the name of Yahweh is Joshua, of the first generation after Moses. There are two sets of stories, one placing the new revelation at Kadesh (chs. 16-18), the other at Sinai (ch. 19). The later stories transfer the events from Kadesh to Sinai, move Jethro into the background, and make less of the influence of Midian. That it was possible to give God a new name was due to the great wave of gratitude which swept over the people at their escape from bondage, and to the fact that Moses apparently did not say much as to the origins of Yahweh, but emphasized what this God had just done and would do for Israel. So the God of Mount Sinai moved from Sinai, his ancient seat, accompanied Israel on their march, and became the God of Palestine; in the later thought of Israel he was dissevered from any particular land and was God of all. Israel and Yahweh became one in the burning flames of Sinai. He was still the God of their fathers, but he had a new name, a new law, a new ritual.

13. Moses as Judge.—Slaves cannot be turned into saints overnight. These people were living the simple life. They had returned to nature. There were no complicated city conditions, no artificial luxuries to quarrel over, no banks or real estate deals, and yet the people stood about Moses from morning till evening. It would have taken a panel of trained psychiatrists and jurists, one can imagine, to deal with all the difficulties that had arisen in the day. When a crisis is over people always have more time to think of their pet troubles and dislikes and of their neighbors' shortcomings. "Too much noise in the next tent when we are trying to sleep"; "Why can't they keep their children in their own tent?" "Our black lamb has been missing for two days"; "They put their goat on the bit of pasture we had found." Probably the cases Moses had to solve would seem very modern to us, for human nature is nothing new.

14 And when Moses' father-in-law saw all that he did to the people, he said, What is this thing that thou doest to the people? Why sittest thou thyself alone, and all the people stand by thee from morning unto even?

15 And Moses said unto his father-in-law, Because the people come unto me to inquire of God:

16 When they have a matter, they come unto me; and I judge between one and another, and I do make them know the statutes of God, and his laws.

17 And Moses' father-in-law said unto him, The thing that thou doest is not good.

18 Thou wilt surely wear away, both thou, and this people that is with thee: for this thing is too heavy for thee; thou art not able to perform it thyself alone.

19 Hearken now unto my voice, I will give thee counsel, and God shall be with thee: Be thou for the people to Godward, that thou mayest bring the causes unto God:

Moses from morning till evening. 14 When Moses' father-in-law saw all that he was doing for the people, he said, "What is this that you are doing for the people? Why do you sit alone, and all the people stand about you from morning till evening?"

15 And Moses said to his father-in-law, "Because the people come to me to inquire of God; 16 when they have a dispute, they come to me and I decide between a man and his neighbor, and I make them know the statutes of God and his decisions." 17 Moses' father-in-law said to him, "What you are doing is not good. 18 You and the people with you will wear yourselves out, for the thing is too heavy for you; you are not able to perform it alone. 19 Listen now to my voice; I will give you counsel, and God be with you! You shall represent the people before God, and bring their cases to God;

14. The cause of Jethro's amazement must be sought in his question, Why do you sit alone? He can hardly have been unacquainted with the meaning of the daily session.

15. To inquire of God is to seek an answer for an issue for which no precedent can suffice. The person exercising this technical function was long known as "seer" (cf. I Sam. 9:9). He might be a priest (I Sam. 22:15), and the breastplate of judgment (28:15-30) was the symbol of this priestly oracular function. Later the prophet was so exclusively the "seer" that the very term was displaced (cf. I Kings 22:8; II Kings 3:11; 8:8; 22:14). The outcome of an inquiry, whether by sacred lot or prophet, had the value of revelation. It was the word of God, not only in rhetorical fashion but also in effect.

16. Moses did not only deliver oracles; he also made routine applications of precedents to specific cases. The statutes of God and his decisions Moses makes known seem to refer to oracular decisions (cf. vss. 19-20).

17-18. Jethro objects. Both Moses and the people suffer unnecessary fatigue. In Num. 11:11-17 Moses himself chafes under his burden.

19-20. Jethro counsels Moses to confine his work to making inquiry of God and promulgating new decisions. And God be with you should perhaps be translated "that God may be with you."

14-20. Jethro's Advice.—The scene is set at evening, around the campfire at Moses' tent, with the family and guests sitting together discussing the events of the day. The old man Jethro politely but courageously gives his son-in-law a little advice. "You really do not arrange things very well, my son. You are dead tired, and the poor folk who have been standing in line all these hours are also dead tired."

He suggests that it is an impractical way of administering justice. No doubt it is a great compliment to Moses to have the people trust him so implicitly. They recognize that he is motivated by the fear of God, by devotion to the truth, and by total unselfishness. Still more extraordinary is his tireless activity. He is doing the work of many men. But the father-in-law is worried both for the health of Moses and for the dignity of his position. So the political organization of Israel is born, as is told in the 20 And thou shalt teach them ordinances and laws, and shalt show them the way wherein they must walk, and the work that they must do.

21 Moreover thou shalt provide out of all the people able men, such as fear God, men of truth, hating covetousness; and place such over them, to be rulers of thousands, and rulers of hundreds, rulers of fifties, and rulers of tens:

22 And let them judge the people at all seasons: and it shall be, that every great matter they shall bring unto thee, but every small matter they shall judge: so shall it be easier for thyself, and they shall bear the burden with thee.

20 and you shall teach them the statutes and the decisions, and make them know the way in which they must walk and what they must do. 21 Moreover choose able men from all the people, such as fear God, men who are trustworthy and who hate a bribe; and place such men over the people as rulers of thousands, of hundreds, of fifties, and of tens. 22 And let them judge the people at all times; every great matter they shall bring to you, but any small matter they shall decide themselves; so it will be easier for you, and they will bear the bur-

21. Jethro now makes his constructive proposal. The word choose (provide KJV) is a translation of the Hebrew hāzāh, from which the noun "seer" is derived. This may mean that Moses must use his peculiar gifts of sacred inquiry to select the judges. But very concrete and empirical criteria are also prescribed. They must be men who fear God, i.e., take him seriously, and they must have personal character and integrity. The standards of moral conduct later exalted in Israel (cf. Ps. 15) are here attributed to the Midianite priest. The division of the people into units of thousands, of hundreds, of fifties, and of tens represents an essential military organization which may, however, have had a very real socio-economic bearing (cf. I Sam. 22:7). It cannot be decided with certainty how early such a division of society prevailed in Israel.

22. Every great matter must probably be understood as a case requiring original instruction, as opposed to any small matter for which a precedent was at hand.

text. Perhaps it was the way Jethro had arranged things in Midian where he was priest. A later version of the story in Num. 11 does not allow Midian or its priest so much credit.

"It is bad for your health and it is bad for your standing among the people"; for Jethro recognized the same truth which Herodotus tells us was discovered by Deïoces, king of the Medes, who established a ceremonial on the principle that if people did not see him too much, "they would think him quite a different sort of being from themselves."⁷ It is natural for people to think this way about their leaders. If one wants to be a pope or king, he should not be seen in the crowd around the bargain counters in basement stores. The judge of a supreme court can have few close friends, and should not appear much in public without his robes of office. Jethro's suggestion was founded on common sense. "Become the supreme court of last resort and let others do the routine work. It will save your health and preserve your influence." It was also the first faint step toward a democratic form of government, foreshadowed in 19:6.

⁷ The History I. 99.

21-27. Religion and Government.—Hugh Latimer, on April 5, 1549, preaching before King Edward VI, quoted vs. 21 as a basis for his exhortation that the king appoint good public officers; and he went on:

Some say preachers should not meddle with such matters; but did not our Saviour Jesus Christ meddle with matters of judgment, when he spake of the wicked judge, to leave example to us to follow, to do the same? . . . Holy scripture qualifieth the officers, and sheweth what manner of men they should be, and of what qualities. . . . "Men of activity," that have stomachs [courage] to do their office; they must not be milksops, nor white-livered knights; they must be wise, hearty, hardy, men of a good stomach. Secondly, he qualifieth them with the fear of God. . . . For if he fear God, he shall be no briber, no perverter of judgment, faithful. Thirdly, they must be chosen officers, . . . "in whom is truth;" if he say it, it shall be done. Fourthly, . . . "hating covetousness:" far from it; he will not come near it that hateth it. . . . Such as be meet to bear office, seek them out, hire them, give them competent and liberal fees, that they shall not need to take any bribes.⁸

⁸ Fifth Sermon Preached Before King Edward VI.

23 If thou shalt do this thing, and God command thee so, then thou shalt be able to endure, and all this people shall also go to their place in peace.

24 So Moses hearkened to the voice of his father-in-law, and did all that he had said.

25 And Moses chose able men out of all Israel, and made them heads over the people, rulers of thousands, rulers of hundreds, rulers of fifties, and rulers of tens.

26 And they judged the people at all seasons: the hard causes they brought unto Moses, but every small matter they judged themselves.

27 ¶ And Moses let his father-in-law depart; and he went his way into his own land.

den with you. 23 If you do this, and God so commands you, then you will be able to endure, and all this people also will go to their place in peace."

24 So Moses gave heed to the voice of his father-in-law and did all that he had said. 25 Moses chose able men out of all Israel, and made them heads over the people, rulers of thousands, of hundreds, of fifties, and of tens. 26 And they judged the people at all times; hard cases they brought to Moses, but any small matter they decided themselves. 27 Then Moses let his father-in-law depart, and he went his way to his own country.

23. To emphasize his conviction that God was the immediate author of Israel's social and cultic institutions, a late editor inserted the provision and God so commands you. Thus the counsel of Jethro is qualified and Jethro recognizes Moses as the human instrument through whom God speaks and works.

24-26. Moses accepted the counsel of his father-in-law and put it into effect.

c) DEPARTURE OF JETHRO (18:27)

27. It is not intimated here that Moses tried to dissuade Jethro from leaving. That is the burden of the parable account (J) in Num. 10:29-32. We are told that Moses wanted Jethro to act as guide in the wilderness. Twice over (Num. 10:29, 32) Moses sought to persuade Jethro by promising him a share in the blessings God would give to Israel in Canaan. No response to Moses' second effort is recorded. Instead, the narrative moves at once to an account of Israel's renewal of the journey with the ark as guide. On the basis of this fact, Gressmann concluded that instead of accepting the request of Moses, Jethro had provided Israel with the ark.

This was plain speaking before the king, and preachers who would emulate him should remember that Latimer was burned at the stake six years afterward. But he loved Exodus. Hear him on 14:15 in another sermon:

Go to Moses, who had the guiding of God's people; see how he used prayer as an instrument to be delivered out of adversity, when he had great rough mountains on every side of him, and before him the Red Sea; Pharaoh's host behind him, peril of death round about him. What did he? Despaired he? No. Whither went he? He repaired to God with his prayer, and said nothing: yet with a great ardency of spirit he pierced God's ear: "Now help, or never, good Lord; no help but in thy hand," quoth he. Though he never moved his lips, yet the scripture saith he cried out, and the Lord heard him, and said, . . . "Why criest thou out so loud?" The people heard him say nothing, and yet God said, "Why criest thou out?" Straightway he struck the water with his rod, and divided it, and it stood up like two walls on either side, between the which God's people passed, and the persecutors were drowned.⁹

The separation between the sacred and the secular referred to in the Exeg. cannot be adequately defined, for the simple reason that in essence there is no such distinction. God must be lord of all. "Render to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and to God the things that are God's" (Mark 12:17); this practical precept is necessary only because of Caesar's imperfect vision and man's inadequate conception of God's omnipresence. The ecclesiastical, however, is never pure or inclusive enough to contain all of religion and nothing but religion. So in practice it is necessary to make a clear division between the field of ecclesiastical authority and that of secular authority. God works in the church, God

⁹ Third Sermon Preached Before King Edward VI, March 22, 1549.

19 In the third month, when the children of Israel were gone forth out of the land of Egypt, the same day came they into the wilderness of Sinai.

2 For they were departed from Rephidim, and were come to the desert of Sinai, and had pitched in the wilderness; and there Israel camped before the mount.

3 And Moses went up unto God, and the LORD called unto him out of the mountain, saying, Thus shalt thou say to the house of Jacob, and tell the children of Israel;

19 On the third new moon after the people of Israel had gone forth out of the land of Egypt, on that day they came into the wilderness of Sinai. 2 And when they set out from Rephidim and came into the wilderness of Sinai, they encamped in the wilderness; and there Israel encamped before the mountain. 3 And Moses went up to God, and the LORD called him out of the mountain, saying, "Thus you shall say to the house of Jacob, and tell the people of

IV. SINAI: THE IMPLEMENTATION OF THE REVELATION (19:1-40:38)

In this third main section of Exodus we have an interpretation of the institutions of Israel as seen in the light of the revelation of God and his election of Israel as attested in the second section (7:14-18:27).

A. THE COVENANT (19:1-24:18)

For a discussion of the Exodus and the covenant of Sinai, cf. Intro., pp. 840-42.

1. THE THEOPHANY (19:1-25)

a) THE INVITATION (19:1-8)

19:1-2a. Vs. 2a should precede vs. 1. In later times the feast of Unleavened Bread was kept on the fifteenth day after the waving of the barley sheaf. Orthodox tradition held that this waving took place on the first day of the Unleavened Bread. The feast of Weeks (Pentecost) therefore fell on the sixth day of the third month. It commemorated the giving of the law on Sinai. P's chronological note may have all this in mind. The arrival at Sinai must thus be placed very early in the third month. The RSV, following the Amer. Trans., says that it was on the first day of the month. This is also the interpretation of Mekilta (ad loc.). Nevertheless, in some ways the expression in the third month (KJV) seems more natural. New moon is a liturgical term not normally accompanied by an ordinal.

2b-3. They encamped before the mountain. The identity of the mountain is taken for granted. Moses has brought his people to the scene at which he received his commis-works in the state, but in both through sinful men, so that it is better at present to keep the rights of both within strictly defined limits—till the time comes when church and state are one, and that will be the coming of the kingdom of God. The church welcomes all signs of a tenderer conscience on the part of the state, and the state recognizes more and more the lifting power of the leaven introduced into society by thousands of priests and ministers who have been constantly reminding the farmer and shopkeeper, the millowner and workman of the charity and humility of Jesus.

19:1-6. The Human Mind and the Heavenly Inspiration.—The truest description of what happened to Moses at Sinai is in these simple words, The LORD called unto him. Behind the message which came from God there may have been many years of brooding thought and selection on the part of Moses, many years of sifting among the laws and customs of men as known to him. How to say what had been placed in his mind, briefly, clearly, simply enough to gain the ears, minds, and hearts of the people was the problem with which he had wrestled in prayer during the long years of his preparation for leadership. Then came the great experience of inspiration out of which the divine message came. Many great leaders, writers, and artists have tried to express what the mysterious experience of inspiration is really like. It is always the climax to long years of labor or fiery experience deeply felt. In the end, musicians, poets, and statesmen have all come to the same mode of expressing and describing it which was used by Moses, The LORD called unto him out of 4 Ye have seen what I did unto the Egyptians, and how I bare you on eagles' wings, and brought you unto myself.

5 Now therefore, if ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people: for all the earth is mine:

Israel: 4 You have seen what I did to the Egyptians, and how I bore you on eagles' wings and brought you to myself. 5 Now therefore, if you will obey my voice and keep my covenant, you shall be my own possession among all peoples; for all the sion. The "sign" of promise (3:12) has been fulfilled. It is also assumed that Yahweh dwells on Sinai. As Moses ascends the mountain, apparently before he has gone far, God calls out to him and offers to make a covenant with the children of Israel. Moses is entrusted with announcing the nature of the proposed covenant to the people.

4. The pledge for God's faithfulness and power in the covenant is his redemptive action already seen in the deliverance: You have seen what I did. The resource of the God of the Exodus is offered to Israel in terms of a permanent relationship. But this covenant will rest on historic fact.

5. The covenant was one between Yahweh and his servants. Obedience was the central role of Israel. This obedience is basically expressed in faith and loyalty. In the Deuteronomic school, which seems to influence the vocabulary of this verse, obedience is given more static and formal terms. To keep my covenant probably must be understood here as obeying the law. Israel is to be God's own possession (Deut. 7:7; 14:2; 26:18). The term, as applied to people, always refers to the elect community. This is also true the mountain. Here is one attempt at elucidation made by a modern writer:

There is only the slightest touch of superstition in the conviction from which I cannot escape of being merely an incarnation, a mouthpiece, a medium of tremendous powers. Revelation is the only word which describes the simple fact that suddenly, with unspeakable certainty and clarity, something is seen and heard, stirring one's being to the very depths. One does not merely seek, one hears a voice. Something is given from behind the veil. Like a flash of lightning the thought becomes plain, standing out as clear as day. . . . Everything happens; it is not an act of one's own will, and yet a torrential sense of freedom, power and divinity courses through one's being. Facts become words, the working laws of life learn speech from thee. . . . This is my experience of inspiration.¹

5. The Law of God.—Alexander Whyte, of Edinburgh, once said to his congregation, "You can read the Bible as a lawyer reads a will, or as the heir reads the will." There is great inspiration in both ways of reading the Bible. No antagonism need exist between the two readers, the exegete and the expositor. They help one another. As the text stands, all the religious experience of the first tellers of the tale, of the various editors and annotators of later times, and of the translators of the original text have gone into the narrative. One Oxford scholar used to say that "in a certain sense the Authorized Version is more inspired than the original."² There is edification in both ways of reading the account of the giving of the law. One can take it as it stands and find in it great riches, or one can study it to discover that the law as given in the story could not have been expressed in its present form by anyone in the time of Moses. It is a mistake to make too much of doubts and negations. Study the text deeply enough to find its positive message. Read the Bible both ways and find inspiration both in what it says and in how it came to say what it does.

¹ Nietzsche's Werke (Leipzig: Alfred Kroner, 1922), XV, 90-91.

As Francis Thompson sings in his "Hound of Heaven," the heart of religious experience is the fact that we are sought of God, not that we seek God. Here the initiative comes from the side of Yahweh; Moses is the intermediary. The religion of Israel was a covenant (berith) which Yahweh offered to make with his people. This chapter is an account of how this definite engagement was entered into by both parties. In vs. 3 Moses receives the offer from Yahweh; in vs. 8 we have the acceptance by the people of the arrangement and treaty. The terms offered and accepted were that Israel should separate itself from all other peoples and devote itself to the worship of the true God. Yahweh

² Evelyn Abbott and Lewis Campbell, The Life and Letters of Benjamin Jowett (New York: E. P. Dutton & Co., 1897), I, 406. See also René Guénon, Man and His Becoming (London: Rider & Co., n.d.), p. 179: "In Arabic the word for translation means also commentary, the one being regarded as inseparable from the other."

6 And ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and a holy nation. These are the words which thou shalt speak unto the children of Israel.

earth is mine, 6 and you shall be to me a kingdom of priests and a holy nation. These are the words which you shall speak to the children of Israel."

of the Greek equivalent in the N.T. (Tit. 2:14; I Pet. 2:9; Eph. 1:14). The freedom of God in his choice of Israel, the pure graciousness of the act, is stressed by for all the earth is mine.

6. The covenant is with the people, not with its leaders or priesthood. Just as in Israel the priests had access to the altar and the Levites rejoiced in the service of God and had proved his power by rescuing the people from Egypt, and had borne them on eagles' wings safe to his Mount of Sinai. If they will keep the covenant, he will make them a kingdom of priests, and a holy nation.

Among the old stories of Israel there is one telling that when it became known that God was about to make the revelation of his law (torah) to the people of Israel from a mountaintop, then all the mountains appeared before God to plead, each one, that it might be chosen for this great honor. "God of All, choose me," said Mount Hermon, "I am the highest of the mountains. It was my summit which, alone of all, towered above the waters of the flood, even as thy torah stands as a great rock above all the sins of the world." "Choose me," said Mount Carmel, "for I am lovely as a garden. Plant upon me the tree of thy torah, as thou didst plant the tree of life in the Garden of Eden." "Choose me, choose me," said Mount Lebanon, "for the voice of my cedars sings of thy greatness, as thy torah turns all the storms of the world into music, hymning thy praise." But God said to Mount Sinai, "From thy summit shall my torah go forth to my people, for thou art set alone in the desert, even as Israel is alone among the peoples, even as I, Yahweh, am alone in the desert of the universe."

The rabbis asked why God had waited till now to reveal his torah unto men. Why had he not given it in the first times to the first men? And God replied to the questioning, "I gave but one commandment unto the first man, 'Thou shalt not eat of the fruit of this tree,' yet Adam did eat of it. How then could they have been able to receive the six hundred and thirteenth commandments of the torah?"

Rabbi Hija bar Abba adds, "Look . . . how much greater is the Torah than the world: to give the world to the world, God needed but seven days: He needed full forty to give to it the Torah."³

6. The Priesthood of All Believers.—This verse was written either before the rise of the professional priesthood in Israel, or by one who believed that sacred officialdom represents a stage in religious growth which should be outgrown. We must, he thought, anticipate a time when people "come of age" religiously and are able to accept their own responsibilities (Jer. 31:34). This is one of the most rejuvenating religious ideas of all time.

When in matters of law or physical health one gets into difficulties, he is wise to consult an expert, a man who has spent his life in the study of these fields of knowledge. The lawyer or physician knows what is the right thing to do. So official churches and official priesthoods argue that when you need religious truth, you should come to religious experts: they know all that can be known about God. But there are fallacies in this line of argument. In the case of law or medicine, the authority of the profession rests entirely on the results which accrue by the knowledge or skill it uses for men's benefit. The majority of clients attain justice or health; otherwise the experts would be discredited in the minds of the people.

But religion deals with matters for which no such check or proof is possible; no one can prove that officials are vested with powers over life after death, or forgiveness of sins; one may even suspect that these supposed powers are used by the professional class in maintaining their power over the people. No one church can produce definite proof that its brand of faith produces a finer type of human being than any other. The claim of any religious group to be unique religious experts rests entirely on their own say-so, their own reading of history (unaccepted by anyone else). This is why all religious dictatorship has to depend on some magical virtue it claims to possess by divine authority. That here is another fallacy is seen from the fact that while one man's religion can learn much from the religion of others, no two experiences are identical. This is God's plenty. The relation of each child to its parents is unique. Every man, as this writer implies, must become his own priest. He cannot shirk this responsibility, though at

³ Edmond Fleg, The Life of Moses, tr. S. H. Guest (New York: E. P. Dutton & Co., 1928), p. 102.

7 ¶ And Moses came and called for the elders of the people, and laid before their faces all these words which the LORD commanded him.

8 And all the people answered together, and said, All that the LORD hath spoken we will do. And Moses returned the words of the people unto the LORD.

7 So Moses came and called the elders of the people, and set before them all these words which the LORD had commanded him. 8 And all the people answered together and said, "All that the LORD has spoken we will do." And Moses reported the words of the support of the faithful, so Israel will fulfill the role of priest in the world. It will be a holy nation, i.e., set apart for a peculiar task. Israel was to be the church. This is also the interpretation of the text in the N.T. (I Pet. 2:5, 9).

7-8. The proposal Yahweh has made to Moses he reports to the elders. The people respond to God's offer of the covenant, and Moses brings their reply to him.

times all of us wish that it were possible, as in law and medicine, simply to put our case in the hands of experts, do what they say, and be relieved from the anguish of decision.

God is tied to no officials. The only badge of his presence is a burning, beating pulse of goodness, radiant and electric with ideas, love, indignation, and high resolve. As soon as any group solemnly claims to be sole conservators of his truth, he is gone from them, to dwell in scattered places with humble folk here and there, mothers of families, sons of toil; in the gracious atmosphere of a classroom or the lonely vigil of a seeker after truth.

6. Consecration of a People.—Every nation and race has its peculiar gifts. As Greece was the classical nation of art and philosophy, as Rome was the classical nation in law and organization, so Israel was the classical religious nation of history as the Western world has known it. Every nation has its own contribution to make to human civilization. But most nations misread themselves: for a hundred years and more the German people seemed to others to be most mistaken about themselves, but the same is true of us all. England glories in itself as the home of "fair play" and is met across the channel with the sobriquet "perfidious Albion"; the United States sings of itself as "the land of the free and the home of the brave," but is more connected in other people's minds with the "almighty dollar." It has been said, "Whenever you get a brand-new idea, look up and see which Greek philosopher expressed it best"; the genius of Rome still is present in our law courts; the religious ideas of the Jews have permeated the whole world; perhaps some race or nation may be able through the coming centuries to become a holy nation by its pure and unique contribution to civilization. The whole of human history is the story of how God offers this great destiny to one nation after another, each in turn, "called according to his purpose" (Rom. 8:28). Holy words consecrating a nation to God were spoken by Lincoln at Gettysburg in November, 1863: "That this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom, and that government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth."

7-8. The Worth of Effort.—It is said that James Harvey Robinson was once asked if he could give in a few words the essence of the thousands of books of history he had read. He replied in three words, "Don't expect anything." The truth lies halfway between this pronouncement and that of an eminent biographer who replied to the same question, "Expect anything." The people of Israel were not able to carry out in the coming years the high resolve they here made, but they probably did better than they would have done if they had never reached for a moment this high peak of self-consecration. When Henry A. Wallace jokingly said to Mme. Litvinov that the object of World War II was to ensure that everybody in the world might have the privilege of drinking a quart of milk a day, and she replied, "Yes, even a pint," they knew that the aim was impossibly high, yet even to have stated it was a step forward.⁴ It is worth while to get people to express their best selves once in a while in hymns and sacraments, even if one knows that he will not be able to deliver a full quart of fulfillment, or even a pint. It is easier to scoff at the Kellogg Pact or the United Nations Charter than it is to be sure that the nations are not a little more decent to each other, less sure of their own rights, than they would have been without these moments of inspiration. It is something to have become aware of the right way, even if we have not the full determination to follow it.

⁴ Carl Sandburg, Home Front Memo (New York: Harcourt, Brace & Co., 1942), p. 172; see also p. 167.

9 And the LORD said unto Moses, Lo, I come unto thee in a thick cloud, that the people may hear when I speak with thee, and believe thee for ever. And Moses told the words of the people unto the LORD.

10 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Go unto the people, and sanctify them to-day and to-morrow, and let them wash their clothes, the people to the LORD. 9 And the LORD said to Moses, "Lo, I am coming to you in a thick cloud, that the people may hear when I speak with you, and may also believe you for ever."

Then Moses told the words of the people to the LORD. 10 And the LORD said to Moses, "Go to the people and consecrate them today and tomorrow, and let them wash

b) THE PREPARATION (19:9-15)

9. The cloud was the symbol of divine presence and protection. It led Israel on pilgrimage (13:21), resting over the tabernacle on the journey from Sinai (40:34-38), and finally abiding in the temple (I Kings 8:10-11). Here it appears as the sign of God's presence on the mount, to authenticate the prophetic role of Moses, that the people may also believe you for ever. Without fully beholding his presence, the people are to hear God's voice. God discloses his will but does not shed his mystery. When Isaiah had his vision of God in the temple we are told that the house was filled with smoke (Isa. 6:4), a metaphor of similar import.

10-11. The distance between man and God is set forth by the three-day period of ceremonial purification decreed for people who are to approach his presence. The emphasis is upon an inherent and permanent difference of status between God and man. The forms of sanctification are very ancient and often show traces of an earlier setting in animism. Thus the washing of garments or of the body could imply the acquisition of

9. When the Truth Is Manifest.—The rabbis say that Abiram and Dathan had been whispering to the people that it was not Yahweh at all, but only Moses who spoke. So that even though God had spoken through Moses, it was necessary at this time for the people to hear the actual voice of God. John Galsworthy has a short story called "The Voice of —," which tells how God's voice once was heard under such circumstances that those who heard it realized by its overwhelming truth that it was the very voice of God. Many devout people seek, as the children of Israel did, for some external proof that the voice is God's. It is the longing for such an external proof which divides the churches. But the proof that it is our Father's voice is not in the affidavit of any doctrine; it is in the voice itself. Fundamentalists and liberals have often denounced each other, but in those rare moments when the storms are high and the floods are out and they need real religion, they find themselves clinging to the same rock. There they cease arguing about whether it is God's voice or Moses' voice that directed them thither; they have listened and helped others struggling in the waters; God has spoken and they have both known his voice.

10. The Approach of Reverence.—Only those who have especially prepared themselves can approach the Godhead. All trace of ritual un-cleanness must be removed (vss. 14-15; I Sam. 7:3; 21:5; Amos 4:12; Matt. 22:11-12). Rites and abstentions preparatory to the meeting-house lingered on in Scotland and New England, especially on days before the celebration of the communion service. This verse is the origin of "Sunday clothes." The Scots had a rite known as "fencing the tables" before the Sacrament to keep out any who were doctrinally or morally unworthy. Communion tokens, special metal coins, were given out by the elders on the previous week to those deemed worthy to partake of the Sacrament, and only those who had them were admitted at the door. Only one who has had the privilege as a child of being one of such a company on its way to church on Sunday morning can feel its real significance. We were "prepared" in raiment, in body, and in soul to meet our Creator; and as we looked around the church among our friends, we felt that all of us were at our best. The grime and worry of the week were gone, the sound of the grand old psalms was in our ears, we were ready for a great experience. The pulpit with its open Bible was lifted on high far above us; tables were spread in the aisles for the Holy Supper; an atmosphere of mutual forgiveness and respect filled the familiar place as all anticipated the approach of the great mysterious invisible presence. One could almost see the cloud in 11 And be ready against the third day: for the third day the LORD will come down in the sight of all the people upon mount Sinai.

12 And thou shalt set bounds unto the people round about, saying, Take heed to yourselves, that ye go not up into the mount, or touch the border of it: whosoever toucheth the mount shall be surely put to death:

their garments, 11 and be ready by the third day; for on the third day the LORD will come down upon Mount Sinai in the sight of all the people. 12 And you shall set bounds for the people round about, saying, "Take heed that you do not go up into the mountain or touch the border of it; whoever touches the mountain shall be put to the holiness of Yahweh or its virtue (II Kings 5-10). The insistence upon the use of running water in such instances (Lev. 14) probably goes back to an era when divine power was thought to reside in stream or fountain. Sometimes washing had the effect of removing the untouchability of those who had been in immediate contact with the holy (Lev. 16:23-24), though the removal of priestly garments alone might suffice for this (Ezek. 44:19). Here the rite of washing is used to neutralize the garment of those who will come into the presence of the holy (cf. Gen. 35:2).

12-13. Even though purified, the common people do not have the privilege of access which is allowed to the priests. As in the later temple, the more holy area is reserved for which was fire and hear the thunderings of a mighty and tender voice. He spoke and we heard him clearly and the whole congregation, filling every pew, arose and answered in the words of "Old Hundredth," thunder answering thunder:

All people that on earth do dwell,
Sing to the Lord with cheerful voice;
Him serve with mirth, his praise forth tell,
Come ye before him and rejoice.

This was our Sinai; for we were children of the N.T. as well as of the Old, and we worshiped one who sat not always in the flames of Sinai, but also among his disciples on another mount amid the flowers which are the care and love of God. And our minister told us that David foresaw that teacher when he wrote Ps. 100.

11-13. When the Trumpets Sound.—There were in ancient Israel two kinds of trumpets, neither of which was properly a musical instrument. Both were used for signals or to augment a joyous uproar among the people. Here the reference is to a sustained note on the ram's horn, the shophar of the contemporary synagogue, probably the most ancient form of wind instrument in use today. The trumpet referred to in vs. 16 is probably the sacred instrument (here supernaturally sounding from the mount) such as is seen leaning against the golden table of showbread on the Arch of Titus. The shophar was usually a curved horn; the ḥaṣōṣerāh, the priestly horn, was straight and made of metal. A ram's horn, when blown, makes a good signal for the group to gather together, but vibrating metal has always made an impression of urgency, importance, majesty, on the human race. One has but to watch and listen when the impressive passages come in the performance of a modern symphony orchestra to see that the human race in all its sophisticated civilization is the same in this respect as were the nomad peoples of the Sinai wilderness.

The trumpet whose call summons the people to worship and the trumpet which announces in the central rite the supreme event of the advent of the divine presence—both these trumpets are needed in any church in any age. The first trumpet is that which gathers the people,

To walk together to the kirk
With a goodly company!

To walk together to the kirk,
And all together pray,
While each to his great Father bends,
Old men, and babes, and loving friends
And youths and maidens gay!⁵

The second trumpet is sounded at the consummation of the rite of worship, the rapturous moment when the end for which they came together is achieved,

Earth breaks up, time drops away,
In flows heaven, with its new day.⁶

⁵ Coleridge, The Rime of the Ancient Mariner, Part VII, sts. xx-xxi.

⁶ Browning, "Christmas-Eve," Part X.

13 There shall not a hand touch it, but he shall surely be stoned, or shot through; whether it be beast or man, it shall not live: when the trumpet soundeth long, they shall come up to the mount.

14 ¶ And Moses went down from the mount unto the people, and sanctified the people; and they washed their clothes.

15 And he said unto the people, Be ready against the third day: come not at your wives.

death; 13 no hand shall touch him, but he shall be stoned or shot; whether beast or man, he shall not live.' When the trumpet sounds a long blast, they shall come up to the mountain." 14 So Moses went down from the mountain to the people, and consecrated the people; and they washed their garments. 15 And he said to the people, "Be ready by the third day; do not go near a woman."

the priests. Transgressors, whether beast or man, would forfeit their life to Yahweh. They were to be put to death. Since the transgressors were taboo, the provision that they must not be touched is precautionary, to insure the safety of the people. The ram's horn gave its name to the year of jubilee. We must assume here that the sounding of the yóbbhēl was a part of the theophany; it was not blown by a man. Since the people would not come up the mount, those summoned here may be the priests. In that case the provision belongs properly after vs. 22.

14-15. Moses conducts the ceremonial preparation. The demand for marital abstinence during the three-day period, not included in the prescriptions for the preparation, seems to rest on an accepted regulation in early Israel (cf. I Sam. 21:4-6).

Three things draw people to church: (a) the hope of acquiring merit with God or man by attending church; (b) the anticipation of partaking in a common sacramental ritual in which one's best self yearns upward and is met and purified by the spirit of God which yearns downward to meet one's aspiration; and (c) the delight of thinking with some good speaker who has schooled himself to express the challenge, comfort, and inspiration of life in sermons filled with understanding sympathy and spiritual insight. All three blend in the average man's blood. The first is of the earth and moves the savage humor of both God and his prophets at times to declare, "I hate, I despise your feasts" (Amos 5:21); it has a slight validity and may lead to deeper understanding. But the other two reasons are real, and in view of them every minister should ask himself, "If I were a layman living here, why in the world should I bestir myself to go to this church? Does the trumpet sound in calling to my church, and when the congregation gathers, is there a supreme experience worth their pilgrimage?" Motion-picture artists spend millions of dollars and thousands of hours of reiterated labor to produce a great effect, but the work of the Lord is too often idly and slovenly done. A great church, which may be the smallest of village sanctuaries, is one into whose services have gone much labor and co-operative energy by preacher, choirs, janitors, and people. When the moment has been prepared for, then the trumpet will sound with no uncertain tones, "and the Lord will come down upon Mount Sinai and call to Moses, and Moses will tell the people."

For the sound of the trumpet thrills preacher and people alike only as the consummation of long preparation and the hardest kind of work. Frederic W. H. Myers, in 1867, knew of these labors:

How have I knelt with arms of my aspiring Lifted all night in irresponsible air,
Dazed and amazed with overmuch desiring,
Blank with the utter agony of prayer! ⁷

And afterward when he had won his way to the full fruition of these vigils, in later editions of St. Paul, he added these lines:

Then with a rush the intolerable craving
Shivers throughout me like a trumpet-call—
Oh to save these! to perish for their saving,
Die for their life, be offered for them all! ⁸

For "the secret of all art . . . lies in the faculty of self oblivion." ⁹

14-15. See Expos. on vs. 10.

⁷ St. Paul (London: Macmillan & Co., 1867), p. 13.

⁸ Ibid. (1905), p. 34.

⁹ E. G. R. Canudo, quoted in A. Coomaraswamy, The Dance of Siva (New York: The Sunwise Turn, Inc., 1918), p. 42.

16 ¶ And it came to pass on the third day in the morning, that there were thunders and lightnings, and a thick cloud upon the mount, and the voice of the trumpet exceeding loud; so that all the people that was in the camp trembled.

17 And Moses brought forth the people out of the camp to meet with God; and they stood at the nether part of the mount.

18 And mount Sinai was altogether on a smoke, because the LORD descended upon it in fire: and the smoke thereof ascended as the smoke of a furnace, and the whole mount quaked greatly.

19 And when the voice of the trumpet sounded long, and waxed louder and louder, Moses spake, and God answered him by a voice.

16 On the morning of the third day there were thunders and lightnings, and a thick cloud upon the mountain, and a very loud trumpet blast, so that all the people who were in the camp trembled. 17 Then Moses brought the people out of the camp to meet God; and they took their stand at the foot of the mountain. 18 And Mount Sinai was wrapped in smoke, because the LORD descended upon it in fire; and the smoke of it went up like the smoke of a kiln, and the whole mountain quaked greatly. 19 And as the sound of the trumpet grew louder and louder, Moses spoke, and God answered him

c) THE APPEARANCE (19:16-25)

16-17. The third day had begun on the evening before. Metaphors descriptive of violent storms accompanied by thunder and lightning are frequently used to describe the manifestation of God. They stress the mystery and awesomeness of his being (cf. Judg. 5:4-5; Isa. 2:12-22; Ps. 29). It seems impossible to decide definitely whether this description is based on an actual recollection of meteorologic conditions at Sinai or represents a literary portrayal in metaphors that were considered appropriate to a theophany. Inasmuch as these are widely used stock metaphors, and inasmuch as this account, at least in its written form, must be several centuries removed from the event, the latter seems much more probable. The real point is that the covenant rests on an authentic self-disclosure of Yahweh. And whether this is so here or not, there are places where descriptions of this type, purely metaphorical in character, are used to assert the authenticity of one's experience of deity (Isa. 6:1-5). In Israel the trumpet (shophar) was used to summon men to war or to proclaim great events (Judg 3:27; I Kings 1:34). This is a heavenly trumpet by which God himself announces his coming. It has persisted as an eschatological metaphor: e.g., "Gabriel's horn" (Matt. 24:31; I Cor. 15:52; I Thess. 4:16).

18-19. Despite vs. 3, Yahweh is pictured as descending to the mountain enveloped in fire; hence the smoke (cf. Isa. 6:4; Joel 2:30 [Hebrew 3:3]). This picture also corresponds to a persistent set of eschatological metaphors. Originally it may have been derived from 16-20. The Mystery of the Divine.—"Verily thou art a God that hidest thyself" (Isa. 45:15); so Sinai was covered by a cloud; so ordinary circumstances hid the divine glory from the people around Jesus (Mark 6:3). Some of our poets have generalized so far as to say that real power is always unseen, its effects are manifest, but the sap in the tree, the infant flower in the bud, the root in the soil, the lifeblood in the heart, the steam in the cylinder, the current in the wire—all must be hidden to do their creative work aright. Thunders and lightnings, and a thick cloud upon the mount; so the presence of God was felt by the people, but God himself was not seen. The followers of Philip (John 14:8) throughout history have always sensed that this was the chief weak point about religion. But for the truly spiritual this fact is one of the great contributions of Israel to the religious thought of the world. "Up, make us gods" (32:1) is the cry of the vulgar always. If God is invisible, they must have an infallible idol to worship—the torah, the Bible itself, the divine official, the human race, old mother nature, the creed of a "true church," the golden calf, something that is more tangible than a mere still small voice after the tempests of life's struggle, or the sense of a presence "felt like sunshine by the blind."¹ But religion is the inner view of life, not its

¹ James Russell Lowell, "The Captive," st. v.

20 And the LORD came down upon mount Sinai, on the top of the mount: and the LORD called Moses up to the top of the mount; and Moses went up.

21 And the LORD said unto Moses, Go down, charge the people, lest they break through unto the LORD to gaze, and many of them perish.

22 And let the priests also, which come near to the LORD, sanctify themselves, lest the LORD break forth upon them.

23 And Moses said unto the LORD, The people cannot come up to mount Sinai: for thou chargedst us, saying, Set bounds about the mount, and sanctify it.

in thunder. 20 And the LORD came down upon Mount Sinai, to the top of the mountain; and the LORD called Moses to the top of the mountain, and Moses went up. 21 And the LORD said to Moses, "Go down and warn the people, lest they break through to the LORD to gaze and many of them perish. 22 And also let the priests who come near to the LORD consecrate themselves, lest the LORD break out upon them." 23 And Moses said to the LORD, "The people cannot come up to Mount Sinai; for thou thyself didst charge us, saying, 'Set bounds about the seismic phenomena. But as in the case of the storm picture (vss. 16-17), one should hesitate to conclude, especially in view of the standard role such metaphors play, that Sinai must have been a volcanically active mountain. In the midst of this terrible mystery and power—"earthquake, wind, and fire"—Moses spake, and God answered him by a voice. There is meaning as well as power. In this account God's holiness is explained by holding together the awesomeness and the voice (cf. I Kings 19:11-13).

20-25. Moses is summoned to enter the cloud resting on the top of the mount. But he has hardly entered the divine presence when Yahweh tells him to return and warn the people lest they break through to the LORD to gaze. In view of vss. 12, 16 this seems anomalous. Vs. 23 appears to be a redactor's note seeking to harmonize the discrepancy, a harmonization in which Yahweh is revealed as very absent-minded! Moses is also to command the priests who will come near to share in the solemnities to consecrate themselves (cf. vs. 10). The arrangements at the mountain with respect to order of relative holiness are probably consciously patterned upon those which later prevailed in the temple. It seems possible to read vs. 24 as it stands only by assuming that it refers outer appearance, and life on its inner side is always responsibility. Man rises to his greatest heights in knowing God.

What a pity, we cannot see Buddha face to face,
Though he is everywhere at any time;
Yet, as in a vision, he appears to us

In the calm morning hour, when there is no human bustling.²

21-25. The Awesomeness of God.—Men of every age form their own symbols of the invisible God. To these primitive people the big noise of thunder, sudden death by lightning, the fright induced by the quaking earth, and the fierce blare of the trumpet—these things seemed fitting symbols of the divine. To us noise, sense of insecurity, sudden death, seem rather beggarly symbols of God's presence; they are symbols of war rather than of God. Bigness, frightfulness, and terror still impress us, but less and less with a sense of the divine presence. We are coming to learn that it takes more courage, brains, resourcefulness, and heroism to make peace than to make war, and that violence in behavior is always an expression of failure.

² Twelfth-century Japanese hymn. See Hastings, Encyclopaedia of Religion and Ethics, VII, 46.

How far such conceptions as divine majesty, numen tremendum, born of dictatorship and war, can be replaced by expressions of the inner awe and reverence of the free spirit for real greatness, remains to be seen. There is more religion in Millet's "Angelus" than in any picture made of Sinai; it is not the subject of the picture that makes it religious so much as the spirit, reverence, skill, and insight with which it is painted. Churches should be ashamed to have poor daubs of sacred subjects hanging in their buildings. Better to have pictures of what are called secular subjects painted by honest workmen whose souls are touched with reverence for God's presence wherever it is found. One of the great tasks of the church today is to provide fitting pictures and symbols of the divine for the young, in architecture, music, sculpture, and painting.

The experience at Sinai was designed to instill a sense of reverence into the people's inter-

24 And the LORD said unto him, Away, get thee down, and thou shalt come up, thou, and Aaron with thee: but let not the priests and the people break through to come up unto the LORD, lest he break forth upon them.

25 So Moses went down unto the people, and spake unto them.

20 And God spake all these words, saying, mountain, and consecrate it.'” 24 And the LORD said to him, “Go down, and come up bringing Aaron with you; but do not let the priests and the people break through to come up to the LORD, lest he break out against them.” 25 So Moses went down to the people and told them.

20 And God spoke all these words, saying, to those priests who were not to come near (vs. 22) to share in the ceremony. Otherwise one must either be content with RSV's translation, Go down and come up, bringing Aaron with you; but do not let the priests and the people . . . or conclude with Beer (Exodus, p. 97) that vs. 21-25 are a badly garbled repetition.

2. THE DECALOGUE (20:1-17)

In general all the laws in Exodus associated with Sinai, including the ordinances for the sanctuary beginning at ch. 25, are covered by all these words God spoke. Specifically, however, the reference is to the commandments that follow immediately. In Hebrew the Decalogue is known as “The Ten Words.” In its primitive Hebrew form it consists of ten brief phrases, each only two words long. From earliest times (34:28; Deut. 4:13; 10:4) it was agreed that these were ten in number, though there was some disagreement as to how that total was arrived at. These ten words God spoke directly to the people (cf. vs. 21). Later, so that they might be preserved for instruction, Moses was summoned to the summit of the mountain to receive the tables on which they were inscribed (24:12; cf. 34:1, 27-28). God gave all other laws indirectly, through the mouth of Moses (vs. 22; 21:1; 24:3; 25:1). Those are probably the words Moses is said to have written down (24:3). For further details see Intro., pp. 842-43.

20:1. That God spoke or wrote laws is a metaphor for the biblical view that all true orders and laws are an expression of God's character and will. In the Bible, law is God in action.

course with God. Reverence is the indefinable attitude of body and spirit with which a noble soul responds to greatness in any form. The response of an audience to a great artist; the attitude of a patient to a great surgeon (“You delivered me from hell and have given me four happy years of life,” said a sufferer to the man whose skill had been his deliverance); the silence of the formerly chattering crowd in that room in Dresden in which used to hang alone the Sistine Madonna; the anticipation of the response in the service of Holy Communion (“Minister: Lift up your hearts. People: We lift them up unto the Lord”); the affectionate murmur among the group when Jesus took a child and set him in the midst of them; the way a real gardener touches the new blossom, or a real teacher greets an original idea in a student, or the children and grandchildren surround grandma at Thanksgiving—all these are soaked with reverence, the sense that there are some things in life which are not common and unclean, but filled with wonder and glory. This was the lesson of these ritual preparations and practices around this mount in the wilderness.

Toward the end of his life Plato published his final conviction that the divine element in the world is to be conceived as a persuasive agency and not as a coercive agency—one of the greatest intellectual discoveries ever made. Hitler, Napoleon, Alexander were great noisemakers and commanders; but what came of it?

20:1-17. The Ten Commandments.—Another version of the Ten Commandments is in Deut. 5:6-21. There are minor differences between the two accounts as well as between the translations, some of which evidently were founded on an earlier version than that in the text. A still different set of commandments is given in 34:10-29. The order of the commandments differs in different texts and versions (see Exeg.).

As we have them, the Ten Commandments are edited by the priests of later generations, yet even as originally formulated, they were not anything new, but were a deft and inspired selection edited from the great mass of moral

2 I am the LORD thy God, which have brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage.

3 Thou shalt have no other gods before me.

2 "I am the LORD your God, who brought you out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage.

3 "You shall have no other gods before me.

† Or besides

2. The conviction that the law expresses God's very character is also driven home by this "formula of self-predication" (cf. Lev. 11:44-45; 19:2). Israel must be holy because God is. But by predicating the law upon God, who out of his goodness redeemed Israel from slavery (cf. 19:4-5; Hos. 13:4), the law becomes the instrument of a mutual relationship in which faith responds to love. This transforms the law into a form for expressing gratitude. The law, as the outcome of the covenant relationship, is thus itself a form of grace. This opening formula counts as the first in the Jewish ordering of "The Ten Words."

3. Yahweh is to be the only God Israel recognizes and worships. The theoretical question about the existence of other gods is not raised. It is assumed that there is only and religious precepts which had gained currency among the people. They have been divided: first through fourth, religious duties; fifth through tenth, moral duties. Sometimes the fifth has been included in the religious section, as respect for parents was a matter of religion with ancient peoples (as today in China). The moral duties have been divided: the sixth through the eighth command directed against mean deeds, the ninth against mean words, the tenth against mean thoughts. The two positive commandments come together, observance of the sabbath and respect for parents, the latter being "the first commandment with promise" (Eph. 6:2); one's curiosity is aroused as to why these two only were positive when it would have been so easy to make them uniform with the others, but nobody knows the answer to that question. It has been surmised that the present form of the Ten Commandments came into being about the time of the Exile. It was impossible in exile for the people to continue to observe the ritual worship of the tabernacle, so they asked for a brief statement of the covenant which bound them to Yahweh. The Ten Commandments were the result. In spite of its brevity and simplicity, the code contains the essence of the spiritual life of Israel (see Exeg.). It is extraordinary under the circumstances that more signs of national prejudice and racial peculiarities have not remained in the code as it stands. It is so universal in its appeal that it has become a world document. Perhaps the only passage in the O.T. which excels this section (vss. 1-17) in brevity of form and breadth of spirit is Mic. 6:6-8; indeed, both might feel at home in the N.T.

An ancient rabbi teaches that all souls of all times were gathered around Sinai to hear the revelation of the law, because each generation will find new applications and new meanings for the general commandments. As stated they seem to define the duty of the citizen as an individual. But later ages wonder how far the principles laid down have not further and wider application to men's official and social duties also. The words of genius have a wider meaning than the thoughts which prompted them, and this code may forbid and command more than individual acts. The common people at least have thought so; among the placards carried in every antiwar parade there has always been one containing the Sixth Commandment; the plain language of the Seventh Commandment insists on reading itself between the lines of many a newspaper account of a new "romance," and the simple language of the Eighth Commandment has been used to describe very pretentious financial structures. The Ten Commandments are a supreme factor in the age-long process of kneading decency into the human race, an endeavor which has been going on for these many thousand years.

2. The Lord the Deliverer.—The Lord does not at this solemn moment name himself as "Creator of the universe," "Lord of the whole world," but as the liberator of Israel from the foreign yoke. It is the Spirit in history, the guiding genius of nations and individuals alike, who speaks. Yahweh chose Israel, not Israel Yahweh. God gives before he asks. He has given freedom; he now asks righteousness and worship.

3. The First Commandment.—Israel was surrounded by people who worshiped other gods. Israel must not follow this practice, but must worship Yahweh only. While originally a device for preventing the mixing of cults and the degradation of religious rites, there is profound truth in the doctrine that no man can worship more than one god. A god cannot remain a god

4 Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, or any likeness of any thing that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth:

5 Thou shalt not bow down thyself to them, nor serve them: for I the LORD thy God am a jealous God, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me;

4 "You shall not make yourself a graven image, or any likeness of anything that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth; 5 you shall not bow down to them or serve them; for I the LORD your God am a jealous God, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children to the third and the fourth generation of those who hate me, one God. This has been called monolatry; it can also be described as a practical monotheism. Lutherans and Roman Catholics add vs. 4-6 to this one to make the First Commandment. Jews do the same to count the second.

4-6. These verses, which constitute the Second Commandment for most Protestants, are for the Lutherans and Roman Catholics the completion of the first. This commandment has played a very great role in the arguments denying the Mosaic origin of the Decalogue. Mowinckel (Le décalogue [Paris: Félix Alcan, 1927: "Études d'histoire et de philosophie religieuses"], pp. 61-62) asserted that, unlike the arguments that proceed from the Deuteronomic spirit and vocabulary of the Decalogue or from the impossibility of fitting it into the social situation of Israel under Moses, the argument that the Decalogue does not agree with the cultic forms and practices of the time of Moses and long after is decisive against its Mosaic origin. And in that argument, both for Mowinckel and others, the Second Commandment plays the major role. The substance of the argument is that as instituted by Moses, and until the seventh century, the Israelite cultus was not without representations of Yahweh that constituted images or ideals. It is maintained that not until Hosea do we meet a single prophet who was an iconoclast. The war against images began with the preaching of Hosea and is accepted as a general policy in the Deuteronomic reforms of the next century. Therefore, it is said, the prohibition of images in the Second Commandment automatically puts the Decalogue in the era of Deuteronomy.

The Hebrew word pésel, which stands back of graven image, comes from the root meaning "to carve." Strictly and originally the word means a sculptured object. But it also became a general term for image, whether graven or molten (Isa. 30:22; 40:19; 44:10; Jer. 10:14). When used of a molten image it is always with the signification of idol (cf. LXX on this verse). Molten images are prohibited in vs. 23 and 34:17. Some-worthy of worship if he has to step down occasionally from his throne to allow another god to reign for a few moments. The reason is that if the first god really were supreme, he would have included in his nature whatever was worthy of worship in the second god, and so call forth from the worshiper all that is noblest in him. There is no place for a second god.

The clearest example of what is meant by the First Commandment is that incident in Mark 5:9, where the spirit of the man possessed of devils could not give his name to the Lord, for, he said, "We are many." There must be some sort of unity in our lives, otherwise no one can depend on us. We cannot even depend on ourselves when we are in another mood, or, as the Bible puts it, when we are possessed by another devil. To worship one God is to have one supreme loyalty in one's life which all one's instincts and passions and vagaries obey. So that, like Luther, one can stand before other principalities and powers of the outer and inner world and refuse to bow to them, saying humbly and definitely, "I can do no other," i.e., "I obey one greater than all of you." Religion must have first place in one's life, otherwise it is only pious talk.

With deep prophetic understanding A. B. Davidson, commenting in 1900 in his class on Jer. 1:10, said, "The consciousness of one God has created the consciousness of one world and one mankind."

4-6. The Second Commandment.—The First Commandment stresses the unity, the Second, the spirituality of God. "Let the hands or the head be at labor, thy heart ought to rest in God.

6 And showing mercy unto thousands of them that love me, and keep my commandments.

6 but showing steadfast love to thousands of those who love me and keep my commandments.

times this has been taken as proof that these passages are older than the Decalogue. Molten images which were of Canaanite origin were prohibited, it is said, but not graven ones, which were an indigenous development in Israel. Then, later in the Second Commandment, runs the argument, graven images were also outlawed. But in view of the fact that pésel can mean a molten as well as a graven image, such an argument does not finally decide the dating of the Second Commandment in relation to vs. 23 and 34:17.

We must, however, recognize that this commandment implies the prohibition of all idolatrous representations of deity. It insists on an aniconic cultus. Whether Moses instituted such a cultus is hotly debated. Those who deny that he did, insist that the ark (Num. 10:35-36; I Sam. 4:3-8), the ephod (Judg. 8:26-27; 17:4-5), teraphim (Judg. 18:14, 17-18, 20; I Sam. 15:23; 19:13, 16), and the brazen serpent (Num. 21:8-9; II Kings 18:4) constituted idols. Further, on the basis of such metaphors as "to see the face of Yahweh" (23:15, 17; 34:23-24; Deut. 16:16) and to "stroke the face of Yahweh" (23:11; I Kings 13:6; Jer. 26:19) it is insisted (cf. McNeile, Exodus, p. lx) that Yahweh was visibly represented at the shrine, whether on the ark or on a bull pedestal. Besides, not until Hosea are the molten images of Yahweh at Bethel, in the form of little golden bulls (I Kings 12:28), condemned.

Those who insist that Moses instituted the aniconic cultus in Israel reply to the argument of Mowinckel, McNeile, and others by saying that the objects proffered as idols were not such in their original signification. When they began to be treated as such, they were destroyed. The ark, they say, was Yahweh's empty throne (cf. Eichrodt, Theologie des A.T., I, 44-51, who concludes his argument with the reminder that "no actual image of Yahweh anywhere in the Old Testament has been documented beyond dispute"). The debate has reached a stalemate. It is possible to save the rest of the Decalogue for the Mosaic period by considering this entire commandment a Deuteronomic addition. All of it after the first clause is Deuteronomic in any case.

The three divisions of the cosmos made by ancients are illustrated by heaven, . . . earth, . . . the water under the earth.

God is a spirit. Remember thou also art a spirit, created in his image."⁸ One of the most valuable religious truths is symbolized in the fact that when one penetrates to the most secret heart of the tabernacle, to the ark of the testimony in the holy of holies, one finds that it is empty. No image or picture of Yahweh can be made. The universe is here thought of as divided into three parts: man is forbidden to portray God (a) as sun, moon, or stars; (b) as human or in the form of a beast; (c) as dragon or fish. Israel is almost unique among ancient nations in its religious dislike of images (yet see Exeg.). Art for these people conducted one to the portals of the sanctuary but could not penetrate the veil. It is impossible to represent the ineffable and intangible. The dislike of images may have been one reason for the lack of aesthetic feeling in a book like Exodus. Glover says that Paul passed through some of the most magnificent scenery in the world on his travels, but there is not so much as a blade of grass in his writings. So also one looks in vain for any sense of the majesty of the desert, or of the beauty of sunrise, or of the oases, in Exodus. Perhaps there is nothing very robust in the way either of humor or aesthetics in the Bible. Its interests are in other directions, though faint indications of these qualities can be found. This commandment has been responsible for much iconoclasm in the history of the church. The souls of religious men have been scared in the presence of beauty. They have always been afraid that beauty might be mistaken for goodness, for these are twins, and so they thought it safer to kill beauty. Lately they have come to see that only the combined efforts of both twins can win young people for the life which is better than goodness and lovelier than beauty, because it is both.

The fourth generation: an early commentator adds, "There would be no fifth generation—they would all be insane." One reason for the validity of this commandment is the fact that ⁸ Jacob Boehme, The Supersensual Life, tr. William Law (London: Allenson, n.d.), Dialogue II, p. 48.

7 Thou shalt not take the name of the LORD thy God in vain: for the LORD will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain.

8 Remember the sabbath day, to keep it holy.

7 "You shall not take the name of the LORD your God in vain; for the LORD will not hold him guiltless who takes his name in vain.

8 "Remember the sabbath day, to keep it

7. The Third Commandment (second for Lutherans and Roman Catholics) deals with the use of Yahweh's name in vain, i.e., for that which lacks reality or truth. The name of God expresses his character and power. To call upon unreality, i.e., that which is not an expression of the divine character, by means of the divine name is to use the name in vain. Not only perjury but also the practice of magic, which constitutes the invocation of ultimate powers with whom God stands in conflict, and the invocation of the dead, were in all probability among the specific prohibitions implied by this commandment at its inception.

8-11. The Fourth (Third) Commandment concerns the sabbath. Next to the commandment prohibiting images (cf. vs. 4-6) this law has been used as illustration of the God seems to show a different face to every man. Religious persecution and bigotry spring from the desire of one man to force other men to worship his god. God speaks to us all as individuals, not as a mob. He is our Father in the N.T., but a good father's relation with each one of his children is unique. One cannot make an image of God that will satisfy everybody. Until all mankind has a common eye, no one person can wholly see God.

7. The Third Commandment.—The misuse of the divine name was especially heinous among people who believed that the name was an essential part of the personality. The very naming of the name invoked the power of the whole person of whom the name was a part. The magic use of the divine name seems to have lingered on among people who were only beginning to know that true religion is more nearly related to moral action than to magic formulas. The magic use of the name was frowned upon as a part of a campaign to banish superstitious ideas and practices from the people (see Num. 23:23; I Sam. 28:9). There may be reference here also to swearing falsely by God, and to light and blasphemous use of the divine name (see Exeg.). We still are subject to both kinds of temptations, to belief in the miraculous power of sacred names (recall the comfort which the old woman told her minister she received "from that blessed word Mesopotamia"), and to the blasphemous use of holy names.

Every minister is tempted to cater to the primitive urge on the part of some in the congregation to hear over and over again certain magic formulas which seem to them to guarantee soundness of faith and comfortable doctrine. Whether the phrase is "the blood of Jesus" or "the brotherhood of man," it is merely magical when it is used as a spell. Religion for many people consists in the good feeling aroused by the repetition of certain beloved formulas. This type of piety can be recognized by its extreme harshness in the denunciation of those who do not use them. It is not an easy type of religion for others to live with. Its sin is disobedience to the Third Commandment, which forbids the cheap and easy use of the divine name to cover up poverty of real thought and feeling.

Common cursing and swearing are due to the desire on the part of inarticulate people to impress others. The easiest way to shock another person into attention seems to be by the use of some particularly sacred and holy name. But the effect wears off almost immediately, and blasphemy simply becomes a boring habit, an expression of impotence and weakness. Special punishments are noted as coming on those who break this commandment. One may at least observe that the punishment in these cases is evident to all in the growing bigotry of the phrase-bound partisan, or the helpless apoplexy of the habitually profane.

John Bunyan tells us how he suddenly left off the habit of swearing, and adds, "Now, I could, without it, speak better and with more pleasantness than ever I could before."⁴

8-11. The Fourth Commandment.—The observance of rest days was fairly common among most primitive races. The four quarters of the moon mark an obvious division of time. The new moon and the full moon are apt to be looked upon as sacred signs. Thus a cycle of fourteen or fifteen days is established, of which

⁴ W. Hale White, John Bunyan (New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1904), p. 12. For the impious use of pious formulas, see the perfect example in the letters of Deacon Snale in The Autobiography of Mark Rutherford (London: Hodder & Stoughton, 1913), chs. iv, vi.

9 Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work:

10 But the seventh day is the sabbath of the LORD thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy manservant, nor thy maidservant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates:

11 For in six days the LORD made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: wherefore the LORD blessed the sabbath day, and hallowed it.

holy. 9 Six days you shall labor, and do all your work; 10 but the seventh day is a sabbath to the LORD your God; in it you shall not do any work, you, or your son, or your daughter, your manservant, or your maidservant, or your cattle, or the sojourner who is within your gates; 11 for in six days the LORD made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that is in them, and rested the seventh day; therefore the LORD blessed the sabbath day and hallowed it.

non-Mosaic origin of the Decalogue. It is held that even in its briefest form this commandment could not come from the nomadic period. For nomads, it is said, there can be no regularly appointed days of rest; life is too unpredictable. Further, it has been held that not until the Exile does the sabbath become a sign of the covenant to the degree here assumed. Though it is impossible to give a final answer to these objections, two qualifications must be noted. Even as "nomads" Israelites were not wild raiders "to whom every day was alike," but a semisedentary people, as the tradition of residence at Kadesh amply illustrates. In the second place, while sabbath keeping became a fine art in the Exile and after, there is no real proof that it was not an ancient form in Israel. That it was is made more probable by the general prevalence of the sabbath in the ancient Near East.

the week of seven or eight days is the half. In the older parts of the Hebrew scriptures the new moon and the sabbath are almost invariably mentioned together.

Whether or not there is a long tradition behind the sacred day, the sabbath as defined in this commandment is distinctively a Jewish institution. In spite of later definitions and the adoption in Scotland and New England of the term "Christian Sabbath" for Sunday, the sacred day of the Jews has only an analogous connection with the Lord's Day of the Christians. The early leaders of the Christian church gave no sanction to the idea that Sunday was the heir of the sabbath, but in the lay mind there was always a sense of some connection between the two observances, and this feeling was legalized in A.D. 789 by Charlemagne's decree which forbade all ordinary labor on Sunday as a breach of the Fourth Commandment. The reformers of the sixteenth century definitely stated that the Fourth Commandment was abrogated by the N.T., yet human nature requires a day of rest from labor, so, they felt, we cannot do better than follow the tradition which sets apart the first day of the week for worship and rest. The result of this stand was that there was a decided slackening in Sunday observance, so that in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries Protestantism turned back to the O.T. for authority in enforcing sabbath observance. The Westminster Shorter Catechism, in answer to the question "How is the Sabbath to be sanctified?" reverts to the Fourth Commandment for the pattern of its answer. A vast literature has grown up around the Sunday-Sabbath question, but it is noticeable that more of the books are in English than in all other languages combined. The fact that Jesus was in his day accused of breaking the sabbath, and that he enunciated the principle that the sabbath was made for man and not man for the sabbath, should incline us to let Sunday, the Christian Lord's Day, rest on its own merits.

For the Jew the sabbath was a sign of the covenant between God and his chosen people (Ezek. 20:12, 20). The sabbath table hymn of Abraham Ibn Ezra (twelfth century) runs, "I keep the sabbath, God keeps me: a covenant eternally!" It was a day of rest in remembrance of the rest of God after the creation (Gen. 2:3; Exod. 31:17), less perhaps "that the Israelite should rest himself, than that he should give others rest."⁵ It was a day of thanksgiving for the deliverance from Egypt (see also Lev. 19:34; Deut. 5:15). It was a day of sanctification (Gen. 1:31-2:3): the kiddush prescribed for use in the home on Friday evening runs in part, "For thou hast chosen us and sanctified us above all

⁵ S. R. Driver in James Hastings, ed., Dictionary of the Bible (New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1902), IV, 321.

12 ¶ Honor thy father and thy mother: that thy days may be long upon the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee.

12 "Honor your father and your mother, that your days may be long in the land which the LORD your God gives you.

In Babylon the sabbath was a day of ill omen. In Israel to keep holy the sabbath is to separate it from other days. It affirms the rule of God in Israel's temporal affairs. The Deuteronomic version of the Decalogue differs most sharply from the Exodus form with respect to this commandment. It adds the ox and the ass (Deut. 5:14) to the list singled out to illustrate the general prohibition of activity. In vs. 11 the reason for the sabbath is that God rested at the end of the Creation (Gen. 2:2-3). This rest constituted the creation of the sabbath, which thus expresses God's own nature. In Deuteronomy the concern is not so much with the ultimate meaning of the sabbath as with its function in Israel (Deut. 5:15). It is to remind Israelites that they were once slaves and that God by his power delivered them and made them his own people. It is, in short, a weekly reminder of Passover, just as for Christians Sunday is a weekly reminder of Easter. The "humanitarian motive" in the function of the sabbath as taught in Deut. 5:15, often stressed, is, at best a corollary.

12. The Fifth (Fourth) Commandment stands at the point of transition from social to civil law. The honoring of parents is a form of piety, though not a cultic observance. In Deut. 5:16 prosperity is added to the promise of length of days in the land offered here. Minor children were bound to strict obedience (21:15, 17; Lev. 20:9; Prov. 30:17). This commandment most especially refers to the treatment of helpless aged dependents. They are not to be sent abroad to be eaten of beasts or to die of exposure, as was the case in some societies. The possession of the land which your God gives ("is giving," "will give"—as in Deuteronomy the locus is Sinai) depends upon the maintenance of family standards.

nations, and in love and favor hast given us thy holy sabbath as an inheritance." It was a prophetic day, as is seen in the grace after the sabbath meal, "May the All-merciful let us inherit the day which shall be wholly a Sabbath and rest in the life everlasting."⁶ This idea was reiterated in the later Christian Sunday-school hymn, "Where congregations ne'er disperse, and sabbaths have no end."⁷ It was a day of joy. The Midrash to Ps. 92 reads, "Sanctify or honor the sabbath by choice meals, beautiful garments; delight your soul with pleasure and I will reward you [for this very pleasure]" (see Isa. 58:13-14). It was a day of worship, a day of special synagogue services, of the reading of the Bible and religious books. The keeping of the sabbath has always been, and with orthodox Jews still is, a mark of differentiation between them and other races among whom they live.

The list of those who are to rest on the sabbath is interesting: when mother protests that after washing, dressing, and feeding the children, getting her husband's Sunday clothes ready, preparing the Sunday dinner, and arriving at church herself nearly on time, she objects to the minister giving out as an opening hymn "O day of rest and gladness," her attention should be called to the fact that the Fourth Commandment says nothing at all about mother resting on the sabbath. The Bible never asks for the impossible. It was to Christiana, the woman in The Pilgrim's Progress, that the vision was vouchsafed of the unregarded celestial crown above the toiler who was cleaning up the house.⁸

12. The Fifth Commandment.—Family solidarity has always been one of the characteristics of Israel. It was so much a part of the social texture of life that it would seem that no special commandment was necessary to protect parents (see 21:15, 17; Lev. 20:9; Deut. 27:16; Prov. 20:20; 30:17). To a child growing up in a Jewish home the Fifth Commandment would be as superfluous as "Thou must breathe" or "Thou must eat." Like the others in this code of laws, it is directed to the adult citizen who is burdened with the care of an aged parent, and is a warning against the heathen habit of abandoning the aged when they can no longer support themselves. The reward for such piety as is here commanded is a stable society in which health and long life can be enjoyed. Medical and surgical science have respected this

⁶ Simeon Singer, Authorised Daily Prayer Book (London: Eyre & Spottiswoode, 1916), p. 284; see Mishnah, Tamid 7:4.

⁷ William Burkitt, "Jerusalem, my happy home."

⁸ Part II, ch. iii.

13 Thou shalt not kill.

14 Thou shalt not commit adultery.

13 "You shall not kill.

14 "You shall not commit adultery.

13. The Hebrew text of the Sixth (Fifth) Commandment is You shall not kill. This is the first of three civil provisions whose order is reversed in the LXX (on the basis of B) thus: theft, adultery, murder. Philo, Luke 18:20; Rom. 13:9 have still a different order: adultery, murder, theft, which corresponds both to the order of the LXX for the Deuteronomic form of the Decalogue and the Nash Papyrus (cf. Hos. 4:2; Jer. 7:9 for a still different order).

The commandment is concerned with the protection of human life within the community of Israel, against destruction by fellow Israelites. The verb is not limited to murder in the criminal sense and may be used of unpremeditated killing (Deut. 4:42). It forbids all killing not explicitly authorized. This means that in Israelite society it did not forbid the slaying of animals, capital punishment, or the killing of enemies in war. It had no direct bearing, either, on suicide.

14. The Seventh (Sixth) Commandment treats the family as a social unit. Its real concern is the sacredness of marriage; only by implication does it relate to the whole range of sexual morals. The verb on which the prohibition rests is used exclusively in the O.T. of marital infidelity or adultery, not of fornication.

commandment so efficiently that modern nations tend to be composed more and more of elderly people. Many proposed plans for the support of the aged are founded on an entirely literal reading of both this commandment and its promise, subtly shifting the responsibility to society and the state, a questionable proceeding needing more study.

The old Semitic proverb reads, "Let a man obey his mother and his father," the scribe mentioning the mother first. Augustine relates that when his mother importuned the good bishop for her son, he said to her at last, "Go thy way, and God bless thee, for it is not possible that the son of these tears should perish."⁹

Blood is thicker than water. The family tie was taken by Jesus as the best illustration of all deep spiritual kinship, and the incident in Matt. 12:50 means that all good people should be as dear to us as our parents. Both Judaism and Christianity are family religions.

13. The Sixth Commandment.—Since this commandment comes in the series determining the citizen's duty to his neighbor, it evidently is not in opposition to Gen. 9:3 or Deut. 20:1-4, nor perhaps relevant to I Sam. 31:4-5; II Sam. 17:23; and certainly is not meant to cancel out 21:12; etc.

A man's life is his most precious earthly possession; his right to enjoy it must be protected from idle irresponsibility which would deprive him of it for "thirty pieces of silver." Yet "I'll kill you if you don't" will always remain the final threat of a will that is balked, or as Undershaft put it in Major Barbara, "Nothing is ever done in this world until men are prepared to kill one another if it is not done."¹ Killing another man will probably never become completely taboo to the human race, but growing understanding begins to bring home to us the fact that retail or mass murder never accomplishes anything except to work off the irritation or fury of the moment. It has been said that the trouble with all punishments is that people like to give them. If one were to appraise the success of the Ten Commandments in attaining their object since their promulgation, perhaps this one has been the most successful of all. The respect for human life has definitely grown. It is harder to pass off murder under a respectable name than any other of the forbidden acts here noted.

14. The Seventh Commandment.—The underlying conviction is that there is a growing and eternal element in the love of a man and a woman. This relationship grows gradually in depth. The first full experience of love should be one in which both souls and bodies, the whole being, glow incandescent in mutual transfiguration. This commandment warns against yielding to the dictatorship of the body. Youth especially is apt to be impatient and greedy; it is apt to imagine that it can reiterate an experience, instead of capturing the full riches of that experience and maturing with it. Hence the chain marriages of Hollywood which never any promises fulfill. The carefree school of occasional infidelities is having a field day in the literature of the twentieth century. A good time seems to be had by all, if enough alcohol is provided to dull a deep-seated fas-

¹ Act III. See The Complete Plays of Bernard Shaw (London: Oldham's Press, 1934), p. 497.

⁹ Confessions III. 12.

15 Thou shalt not steal.

15 "You shall not steal.

15. To the sacredness of life and of the family, the Eighth (Seventh) Commandment adds the sacredness of property.

tidiousness of which human nature cannot quite rid itself even in the most advanced circles. An English magazine ran a competition in 1946 for the best new set of Ten Commandments. After reading the large number of entries, the editor had to confess that Moses still had the advantage, that he had the virtue of being concrete and brief and did not allow himself to deteriorate into mere advice. This Seventh Commandment seemed to give the competitors most trouble to revise. One question was: "Can an initial mistake in matrimony never be remedied? Must it ruin the lives of husband, wife, and children?" The true answer seems to be that in spite of the vulgarization of divorce by the spoiled children of the day, it has a place in our social life under uniform laws administered with sympathetic dignity. An exquisite Botticelli form sometimes contains a poisonous brew of egoism and greed and cruelty willing to be adored and taken care of for the rest of its life, and nothing more. Nature does not play quite fair with youth, and mistakes have to be corrected; but this commandment still stands guard over the ideal which is so often realized of true love between a man and a woman, deepening with the years, an eternal devotion, as William Blake says:

Every little act,
Word, work, & wish that has existed, all remaining still.

For every thing exists; & not one sigh nor smile nor tear,
One hair nor particle of dust, not one can pass away.²

While originally this commandment expressed the male point of view and may have meant, "My wife is my property, and is taboo to all other men," while it has been often used as a defensive device to protect the marital comfort of negligent and unfaithful husbands, yet its enunciation has been of the greatest importance in its concern for the inviolability of the home, and its general form has made it equally applicable both to men and women. It was a step in the process of humanizing nature; it is a milestone in the long and devious road that leads from the brute to the human, from Gen. 9:1 downhill to Eph. 5:12, but also up to Matt. 5:28, 32, and at last to Matt. 22:30: for the body is a schoolroom in which the soul does grow, and the soul loves it so that they become one, and at the resurrection none can tell whether it is the resurrection of the body or the resurrection of the soul. Nothing is lost.

² Jerusalem, ch. i.

15. The Eighth Commandment.—This is the basic commandment on which the idea of private property rests. It is the protection which the diligent and prudent have against the idle and careless. The underlying conviction is, "I have toiled to collect these possessions, and you who have been idle must not rob me of the fruits of my industry." Over a century ago the Plaindealer comfortably asserted, "In a great majority of cases the possession of property is the proof of merit."³ The human race has as a whole been sure of the validity of this principle. Yet all through human history, in each generation, there have been some who have made themselves unpopular with the ruling classes by gnawing and nibbling around the principle of the sanctity of private property. They have requested that some attention be given to the rules of the game under which this property was acquired. They have asked, "Are the rules fair?" or "Are the dice loaded which give some people such Saratoga trunks full of splendor and other equally worthy people only a beggarly bundle of sorry rags?" Horace Greeley in 1845 defined this controversy in historic words as "the everlasting class war of a portion of those who HAVE NOT against the mass of those who HAVE."⁴

Thinking men strive toward an application of this commandment which will ensure that the products of industry will be fairly divided, that the rules may ensure that each man shall have his fair share of the good things of this life. They do not limit the application of the commandment to forbidding the poor man to steal the silver candlesticks from the rich man; they pry into the question whether the superior "merit" of the few is real or imaginary, whether our economic system itself does not permit the few privileged ones continually to steal from the many life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. Theodore Roosevelt symbolized this effort in the slogan he invented for his Progressive Party, "Pass Prosperity Around!" One might

³ May 13, 1837.

⁴ "The Tariff Question," American Whig Review, II (1845), 114.

16 Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor.

17 Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's house, thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's wife, nor his manservant, nor his maidservant, nor his ox, nor his ass, nor any thing that is thy neighbor's.

16 "You shall not bear false witness against your neighbor.

17 "You shall not covet your neighbor's house; you shall not covet your neighbor's wife, or his manservant, or his maidservant, or his ox, or his ass, or anything that is your neighbor's."

16. The Ninth (Eighth) Commandment sets forth the principle of the sacredness of the judicial system. The verb in the prohibition means "to answer"; i.e., at court, whether as plaintiff, defendant, or witness, a man must speak the truth in a charge involving his neighbor. The more general notions of talebearing and "character assassination" are perhaps not ruled out (23:1a), but the central concern is the integrity of the judicial system. One is reminded that in the Code of Hammurabi 1-4 the bearer of false witness was upon discovery sentenced to the punishment normal to the crime of which he had falsely accused another.

17. Lutherans and Roman Catholics treat this verse as two separate commandments. Both in the LXX for this verse and in the parallel Decalogue in Deut. 5 the wife is mentioned before the house. This is often explained as indicating a rise in the estimate use the illustration of the poet and ask, Who is stealing when

The golf links lie so near the mill
That almost every day
The laboring children can look out
And see the men at play?⁵

But the possessive instinct has its limits. The stars still are in their ancient places simply because they are out of the reach of predatory human hands.

16. The Ninth Commandment.—The Ten Commandments have been criticized because they do not contain a prohibition against such an elementary sin as lying. But this Ninth Commandment is at least a start in the right direction. It is true that it refers specifically to evidence given in court about the conduct of a member of one's own race, but other passages in the O.T. testify to the people's understanding of the importance of truth, i.e., the agreement between language and facts (Deut. 13:14; 17:4; 22:20; Jer. 9:5; Ps. 15:2 ["in his heart," i.e., cordially, gladly]; Prov. 12:19; 14:25; 22:21). There is much to be said for starting the teaching of virtue by a simple concrete case rather than with a general principle. If a people start with this commandment, it may be possible to continue in the school of virtue till the principle of truth-telling is established in the more difficult instances that arise between buyer and seller (Prov. 20:14); but it is probably true that in the early books of the O.T. lying artistically was looked upon as something of an art which had its masterpieces. So Laban seemed to have felt about his exploit in Gen. 29:21-27; but Jacob could not very well complain if he remembered the incident related in Gen. 27:6-36, of which he and his mother were also proud.

⁵ From Portraits and Protests by Sarah N. Cleghorn. Copyright, 1917, by Henry Holt & Co., Inc. Reprinted by permission of the publishers.

Truth-telling has never been what might be called an endearing virtue. George Washington has gained nothing in popularity among youthful Americans by Parson Weems's story of the cherry tree: there are too many people who pride themselves on telling unpleasant truths; and there are some races who, though possessing little of this virtue, seem to have most of the other virtues and yet are delightful people! Perhaps Moses went as far as he could at the time in this commandment; the world seems still to consist of two types of people—those who believe in principles like truth-telling, and those who believe in people and lay more stress on manners and courtesy and kindness. There are still too few who unite both types in themselves and love truth and people equally well, or almost equally well. These are the men and women who know the meaning of the text "speaking the truth in love" (Eph. 4:15).

17. The Tenth Commandment.—The word translated house really means "household," and the rest of the commandment is an explication of the scope of that word (see Exeg.). The commandments are briefer in Hebrew than in the English translation, and in their original form were briefer still. The fact that there are no ways in English to issue sharp, short "forbiddings" may indicate certain racial characteristics in those who speak the language. The peremptory orders in the Hebrew which could be represented in English only as "No murder!"

18 ¶ And all the people saw the thunderings, and the lightnings, and the noise of the trumpet, and the mountain smoking: and when the people saw it, they removed, and stood afar off.

18 Now when all the people perceived the thunderings and the lightnings and the sound of the trumpet and the mountain smoking, the people were afraid and tremof women. Although such an interpretation is possible, what seems more probable is that "house" is here the inclusive term for all the family and possessions of a man, as is still true among the Arabs today. Some of the people and possessions included in the general term were later itemized to point up this prohibition of jealous desire. As in vs. 12, this final principle lies in the realm of sentiment, attitude, and thought. It is recognized that from this realm flow the deeds and words in the four preceding commandments.

3. THE PEOPLE'S FEAR OF GOD (20:18-20)

This brief section continues the account of the theophany begun in ch. 19 and interrupted by the Decalogue. It is concerned with the effect of the appearance upon the people and interprets its real meaning to them.

18. The scene in 19:16-19 is summarized. The people were afraid and trembled. The last word is synonymous with "swaying" or "reeling." The people fell back at the

"No adultery!" "No stealing!" lose much of their force when made to read "Thou shalt not commit adultery," etc. The word translated covet seems to mean "indulge in thoughts which tend to lead to the actions named in the previous commandments." In the early days when the first Greek translation of the Hebrew text was made, the scholars used a word in Greek which clearly means "to set one's heart upon a thing," and Deuteronomy uses another Hebrew word which makes it doubly sure that the intention here is to prohibit grasping thoughts that lead to grasping deeds.

Some have seen a great advance in social sense illustrated in the form in which the commandments are given here and in Deuteronomy. This Tenth Commandment is a case in point. There the wife is not included as a part of the household, but is distinguished from other property both in position and by the use of a special verb (see Exeg. on Deut. 5:21). Augustine (followed by the Roman Catholics and Lutherans) unites the first two commandments into one and divides the tenth into two. This was a further recognition of the unique position of the wife. The commandment is one of the early insights into the fact that the inner life of man determines destiny. Here we step from the outer world of act and word, of crime and punishment, into the secret place where all good and all evil begin, the heart of man. The Ten Commandments were one of the early attempts to clean up that place; and that project of slum clearance has been going forward slowly ever since. Religion is in essence the keeping of good company in one's inner life, and in the Tenth Commandment begins the search for an understanding of how to organize the powers and presences of that hidden country so as to produce good lives, peace, and brotherhood.

The inwardness of the last words of the Decalogue make them the very threshold of the N.T. There is no doubt that Jesus, in the Sermon on the Mount, had the Ten Commandments in mind. Many interesting diagrams like the following might be made:

	1. One God		Our Father (Matt. 6:9)
Ye	2. No images		No forms needed at all (Matt. 6:7) have	3. No blas- phemy		Hallowed be thy name (Matt. 6:9) heard		But that	4. Man for the sabbath	I	The sabbath for man (Mark 2:27)
it was	5. Honor your parents	say	And also all good people (Matt. 12:50) said	6. No killing	unto	No anger (Matt. 5:22)
by	7. No adultery	you	No lust (Matt. 5:28) them	8. No stealing		Give freely (Matt. 5:42) of old	9. No false swearing		No swearing (Matt. 5:34)
time	10. No coveting		Covet righteous- ness (Matt. 5:6)

18-20. Religious Dread.—So far the people had only heard terrible sounds, but no words such 19 And they said unto Moses, Speak thou with us, and we will hear: but let not God speak with us, lest we die.

20 And Moses said unto the people, Fear not: for God is come to prove you, and that his fear may be before your faces, that ye sin not.

21 And the people stood afar off, and Moses drew near unto the thick darkness where God was.

bled; and they stood afar off, 19 and said to Moses, "You speak to us, and we will hear; but let not God speak to us, lest we die." 20 And Moses said to the people, "Do not fear; for God has come to prove you, and that the fear of him may be before your eyes, that you may not sin."

21 And the people stood afar off, while Moses drew near to the thick cloud where display of God's glory and they stood afar off. The idea of the holy, in terms of God's mystery and transcendence, pervades the scene. For this narrator awe and respect are taken as the normative mood in religion. God is holy.

19. It is here explained how Moses, at the people's request, became the mediator of the law to the people. They promise to hear, i.e., to obey his words. If God should speak in words, even more intimate and powerful aspects of his nature would be disclosed than are seen in the natural phenomena. In terms of speech—meaning, will, and reason—God is at once most like and most unlike man. His word is the sword of the Spirit.

20. Moses explains the terrible scene as a manifestation of God's goodness to Israel. It is another "sign" (15:25) of his power, to authenticate himself beyond doubt, so that you may not sin. Sin is understood as a lack of faith in God, a doubt about or denial of his reality. To have the fear of him is to live by faith in his power and reality. One is left with the impression that God did speak at this point and that the Decalogue must be understood as the record of his speech (Deut. 5:4).

4. THE LAWS OF THE COVENANT (20:21–23:33)

See Intro., pp. 843-44.

as those in vss. 1-17; they had bad consciences and were afraid of condemnation and punishment. Moses reassures them that the awfulness of the manifestation is intended to produce reverence, not panic: it is not designed to scare them but (in the common phrase) "to put the fear of God into them." Robert Burton thinks that morbid and dangerous conditions of mind are caused by "thundering ministers" who dwell too much in their sermons on the terrors of the divine being to sinful man.⁶ Jonathan Edwards, however, seemed to approve of the use of fear as one way of keeping man from sin. It seems to us that both sin and its punishment are things to be afraid of, and that God, even to the worst sinner, is not an object of fear but rather of reverent awe and humble affection. Reinhold Niebuhr's two presuppositions of a true religion might be taken as a commentary on Exod. 20:19-21: "The first is a sense of reverence for a majesty, and of dependence upon an ultimate source of being. The second is a sense of moral obligation laid upon one from beyond oneself, and of moral unworthiness before a judge."⁷

⁶ Anatomy of Melancholy, ed. Floyd Dell and Paul Jordan-Smith (New York: Tudor Publishing Co., 1948), p. 942.

⁷ In a radio broadcast.

But fear in itself is barren. Montaigne says, "It is feare I stand most in feare of."⁸ It is at best only a danger signal for immature minds, a fence on the way, leading us to the real goal of human action. As expressed by Seneca, "The reward for a good deed is to have done it," and Cicero, "The fruit of a service done is in the service itself," and by Paul (as in the French translation), "Our glory is the testimony of our conscience" (II Cor. 1:12).

The "dread" which Kierkegaard felt so deeply is not mere panic: "The man who has learned the meaning of Dread has learned the highest of all things. . . . Dread is the possibility of freedom."⁹ It is what Augustine meant by the restlessness of the man God has made for himself. It is the state of mind of the man who is faced with the choice between two eternities. Every instant we make that choice; and in making it we really exist, are really human.

20:21–23:33. The Book of the Covenant.—It is believed that this section is that referred to in 24:7 as "the book of the covenant." It is also described in 24:3 as "judgments" or "ordinances," and as "words," and in 24:4 as "the ⁸ Essays, Bk I, ch. xviii.

⁹ Quoted by T. S. Gregory, "Kierkegaard: the Prophet of Now," The Listener, XXXVI (1946), 718.

22 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Thus thou shalt say unto the children of Israel, Ye have seen that I have talked with you from heaven.

God was. 22 And the LORD said to Moses, "Thus you shall say to the people of Israel: 'You have seen for yourselves that I have

a) TWO CULT LAWS (20:21-26)

(1) THE UNITY OF GOD (20:21-23)

21. After God had addressed the people in the words of the Decalogue Moses entered the cloud of mystery which concealed God from the people.

22. The commandments God is about to promulgate are predicated upon his own character (cf. vs. 2) which has just been authenticated by his address to the people. This verse may be an editor's recasting of the meaning of vs. 20. Its point is to motivate obedience to the laws that follow.

words of the LORD" which were written down by Moses. Now these are the ordinances which you shall set before them (for its details see the Exeg.). The history of the compilation of the book of the covenant would be very complicated, but a study of the document tells us much about the conditions of life in which it was codified and edited.

The main body of the book is concerned with civil justice: there are precepts of ritual law at the beginning and end. As is usual in the Pentateuch, all laws, whether ritual or secular, derive from the will of Yahweh as their source and justification. Ritual and moral precepts are in the form of direct commands (20:24; 22:20); legal decisions are introduced by an "if" clause stating the conditions followed by the "law" on the question (see 21:2-11, where there are ten "if" clauses). The whole style is very similar to that of the ancient codes of law of other nations such as are found in Sumerian inscriptions and the remains of the laws and precepts of the Babylonians, Assyrians, and Hittites.

An interesting experiment can be made by any reader who will study the book of the covenant verse by verse and note down as he goes along the actual social conditions presupposed by each precept and ordinance. He will find that the people who recorded these decisions were not nomads or wandering tent dwellers of the desert, nor were they city folk tempted to the luxurious life which in the eighth century angered the prophets, Amos and Hosea in Israel, Isaiah and Micah in Judah. Their wealth was in cattle. The ass, the cow, and the sheep are mentioned, but not the camel or the horse, although in the nomad period camels were well known (Gen. 12:16; 24:10) and Solomon brought horses in great numbers out of Egypt (I Kings 10:28; II Chr. 9:28). In addition to the raising of cattle, the people had farms, orchards, olive yards, and vineyards. Money both of gold and silver was in circulation. There were loans to people who needed this help, but there was no right to charge interest. People lived in villages and towns. Some were free and some were slaves. There were priests, judges, doctors, artisans, peasants, and shepherds, but there is no mention of soldiers or shopkeepers.

There is embodied in the book a great deal of sympathy for the weak and defenseless in the community—widows, orphans, the poor, and strangers. The laws about slavery are distinguished by their comparative mildness. The power of the father in his family is nearly absolute—he can sell his children into slavery. Any offense against one's parents is punished severely, even with death itself. A limit is set to the private feud, and one must be kind even to his enemy when he is in trouble.

While there are vestiges of primitive barbarism (as in the lex talionis [tit for tat] of 21:23-25, and the right of the master to flog male and female slaves to death provided they do not actually die under his hand), yet the book of the covenant is an attempt to improve existing conditions and advance in justice and morality. "It compares favourably with the English criminal law in the eighteenth century, and with the statutes of the slave states of America in the earlier half of the nineteenth century."¹

At the beginning of the twentieth century there were found in Susa the pieces of a block of black diorite nearly eight feet high, containing 3,600 lines of cuneiform. The pieces were fitted together and the Code of Hammurabi (as it was discovered to be) is now in Paris. It was a monument of this great king, one of the most important personalities in the history of western Asia, the founder of the greatness of Babylonia. He has been identified with the Amraphel of Gen. 14:1. The inscription is about half the length of Exodus. At the top of one side there is carved the figure of Hammurabi receiving these

¹ Bennett, Exodus, p. 13.

23 Ye shall not make with me gods of silver, neither shall ye make unto you gods of gold.	talked with you from heaven. 23 You shall not make gods of silver to be with me, nor shall you make for yourselves gods of gold.
---	--

23. The problem in this verse is whether it prohibits gods other than Yahweh (vs. 2; 22:20; 23:13), whether it prohibits molten images (34:17), or whether it does both. The LXX interprets the verse to mean that it prohibits molten images (cf. Amer. Trans.). The RSV leaves the impression that the verse both inculcates monolatry and prohibits images. This seems nearer to the real meaning, though these two may form a single item, i.e., to make molten images would constitute transgressing the first provision. The difficult Hebrew idiom, gods of silver to be with me, has its Arabic counterpart in the Koranic prohibitions of polytheism (shirk); e.g., "Serve Allah and do not associate [share] anything with him" (4:40), or "Verily, God will not forgive that there be associated [shared] with him . . ." (4:51; cf. also 6:80, 152; 7:31 [Flügel ed.]). The unity of the Godhead must not be destroyed by associating other entities with Allah, i.e., offering them worship. Similarly, the Hebrew command לא תעשון אתי ("You must not make with me") means that no one and nothing must be associated with Yahweh. To make molten gods would mean doing just that; the last half of the verse stands in apposition to the first half.

laws from Shamash the sun-god, "the judge of heaven and earth." Both the Code of Hammurabi and the book of the covenant are expressions of the ideas of law which were common to all the Semitic nations of the time. The similarities between the two documents seem sometimes almost too marked to be accounted for simply by this common origin of popular conceptions in the two peoples. The book of the covenant may show the indirect influence of the code. Perhaps through the Canaanites the Hebrews were touched by the spirit of the Babylonian law. But the book of the covenant is by no means a slavish imitation. Conditions were entirely different. The code was formulated for a much more complicated society of city dwellers and suburbanites, where there were priests, judges, doctors, oculists, soldiers, storekeepers, tailors, seamen, innkeepers, peasants, etc., and king and court. The children of Israel seem to have taken what they could use from the code which they found among the earlier inhabitants of the land, and adopted the laws there found to a simpler way of life (yet see Intro., pp. 842-43). The covenant might be said to be the laws of the people as contrasted to the laws of the king found in the code.

The Code of Hammurabi was evidently not a mere collection of existing laws and customs from different times, but was a revision and improvement of existing laws by a man who wished to make ancient crude justice more humane and temper it with more charity. In the same way, all that we know about Moses would incline him in the same direction, toward the humanizing of ancient rough justice and the injection into savage ways of more kindness and mercy. His name was connected with the book of the covenant as one of the first to revise and spiritualize its contents. It probably assumed its present form ca. 900-800 B.C. when Lycurgus was similarly revising the laws of Sparta. The sources from which the book of the covenant grew into being are in the dim beginnings of all Semitic civilization in Babylonia and elsewhere, in the reforms instituted by many forward-looking individuals like Hammurabi, in the customs and laws of the Canaanites into whose land the Hebrews came, but perhaps most of all in the scenes implied in 18:13-26, when Moses and his colleagues "judged the people at all seasons," for these verses perhaps show how God spoke to Moses and made it literal truth to say in 24:3, "Moses . . . told the people all the words of the LORD and all the ordinances."

There is a good historical parallel in the Pilgrims' experiences, in the Mayflower Compact, and in the "Laws of the Colony of New Plymouth, 1623," the first entry in which is, "It was ordained 17 days of December An^o 1623 by the court then held that all criminall facts, and also all matters of trespasses and debts between man and man should be tried by the verdict of twelve honest men to be impanelled by authority in forme of a jury upon their oath."² As in the book of the covenant, we have here an ancient human custom adopted and modified and passed on to people starting on a new way of life, to be further developed by them as experience dictates, and treasured by them as a ² The Compact with the Charter and Laws of the Colony of New Plymouth (Boston: Dutton & Wentworth, 1836), p. 28.

24 ¶ An altar of earth thou shalt make unto me, and shalt sacrifice thereon thy burnt offerings, and thy peace offerings, thy sheep, and thine oxen: in all places where I record my name I will come unto thee, and I will bless thee.

25 And if thou wilt make me an altar of stone, thou shalt not build it of hewn stone: for if thou lift up thy tool upon it, thou hast polluted it.

24 An altar of earth you shall make for me and sacrifice on it your burnt offerings and your peace offerings, your sheep and your oxen; in every place where I cause my name to be remembered I will come to you and bless you. 25 And if you make me an altar of stone, you shall not build it of hewn stones; for if you wield your tool upon it

(2) THE ALTAR (20:24-26)

24. The simplest and most traditional was the altar of earth under the open sky. No altar is here singled out for special honor. The presupposition is that people sacrifice as families or clans in every place in which they are located. The place is roughly the equivalent of the high places (cf. I Sam. 9:13). The head of the clan, or perhaps a priest, is the officiant. Two sacrifices are specified: the 'ólāh or "burnt offering" in which the victim is entirely burned on the altar in an act of homage to God; and the shélem or "peace offering" which is a festival meal that seals the ties of brotherhood within the group and between the group and God.

25. An altar of unchiseled stones is also permitted (cf. Josh. 8:30; I Kings 18:31). It seems that the demand of this law was never forgotten (Deut. 27:5-6; I Macc. 4:47) though the fact that later altars had horns (I Kings 1:50-51) and the description of elaborate altars in 27:1-8; Ezek. 43:13-17, show that Israel found ways of circumventing the ancient rudeness!

national heritage, as is seen in references to the jury system in the Declaration of Independence, and in the third article of the Constitution of the United States. Most of the verses of the book of the covenant have equally long histories before and after their insertion.

24-26. The Impulse to Localize God.—As is seen in Gen. 28:16, "Surely the LORD is in this place," the idea of the omnipresence of God was not yet a part of the religious faith of the time. Far more real to these people was the certainty that God was mysteriously present in certain special places. The altar was in ancient days the home of the Godhead, where God received his worshipers as his guests, as his children, and as petitioners for his favor. The wishing-well of later folklore continued the idea of a place where longing and petition had special validity and power. Here the Israelites are urged to erect many such altars. They can be made of earth or of unhewn stone. It was perhaps for such an altar that Naaman wanted his two mules' burden of earth (II Kings 5:17). It is generally believed that the prohibition against hewing the stones sprang from a feeling that the deity was driven out of the stone by the blows of a tool (see vs. 4; Gen. 28:22; 31:46; I Kings 18:31-32 and 6:7, where a compromise was made by having the hewing done in the quarry).

No steps were permitted on these open-air altars. The reasons of modesty given may also lie at the root of the priestly garb throughout the ages. A Princeton theological professor used to express the same idea in other words when he urged his students to wear a gown in the pulpit, and quoted the last clause in Ps. 147:10; a vestment is not an expression of the personality of the wearer, but of the fact that he speaks not as an individual but as a divine messenger. Only the two most lofty sacrifices are mentioned: the burnt offering dedicated entirely to the god, and the peace offering, of which the god has his generous part but the balance of which serves as a happy meal for the participants. The first is an expression of the worshiper's sense of God's majesty, the second of the brotherhood which exists between God and his people and among the people themselves. That there were already signs of denominational differences in ritual can be seen by the fact that Solomon's altars did not conform to these regulations, but were heretical, being made of gold and brass (I Kings 7:48; 8:64; see also Isa. 65:3; Exod. 27:1). The idea that God is especially near one in certain places corresponds with something very deep in human experience. We lose something when there is no "sacred place" in our home or our town or our country. Children and grandchildren revere the little trail in the woods leading 26 Neither shalt thou go up by steps unto mine altar, that thy nakedness be not discovered thereon.

21 Now these are the judgments which thou shalt set before them.

2 If thou buy a Hebrew servant, six years he shall serve: and in the seventh he shall go out free for nothing.

you profane it. 26 And you shall not go up by steps to my altar, that your nakedness be not exposed on it.'

21 "Now these are the ordinances which you shall set before them.

2 When you buy a Hebrew slave, he shall serve six years, and in the seventh he shall

26. In 28:42 the priestly dress is designed to overcome this objection to altar steps. The provision presupposed that the officiant was the head of a household wearing a short skirt. The altar in Ezekiel (43:17) was provided with steps, but the altar of Herod was approached by an incline, out of respect to the ancient ruling (McNeile, Exodus, p. 125).

b) THE SOCIAL CODE (21:1-23:19)

(1) TITLE (21:1)

21:1. This ostensibly continues the audience begun in 20:22. The ordinances intended to be covered by the heading run through 23:19, even though perhaps originally 21:2-22:17 was an independent unit. Ordinances in this context must be understood as normative precedents, case law.

(2) CIVIL AND CRIMINAL LAWS (21:2-22:17)

(a) THE ISRAELITE SLAVE (21:2-11)

2. When you buy a Hebrew slave: This law does not deal with foreigners, such as prisoners of war, who have been made slaves for life, or with their children, or the sale of either. The concern is with the male slave. Because of need he may have sold himself as a slave (Lev. 25:39); he may have been claimed in payment for a debt (II Kings 4:1); or he may have been sold by his parents because of their need for money (Neh. 5:2). The value of such a six-year slave was thirty shekels (vs. 32). The term of a slave (he shall serve six years) is twice the length of a slave's term in ancient Babylonia (Code of Hammurabi 117). In most other respects greater humaneness is shown the Israelite slave. It has been suggested that the phrase "double the hire of a hireling" (Deut. 15:18) reflects a knowledge of the three-year rule for slaves in Babylonia. Before a slave's term was up he could be redeemed by purchase. If he were seriously injured he would also get his freedom (vss. 26-27). Later, no matter how briefly he had served, the year of jubilee would, if taken seriously, have given a slave his freedom (Isaac Mendelsohn, Slavery in the Ancient Near East [New York: Oxford University Press, 1949], p. 85).

to the spot where "father used to go to see the sunset"; a lovely shrine in a church attracts worshippers from all denominations; one cannot visit the Adams Monument in Rock Creek Cemetery, Washington, rain or shine, summer or winter, without being likely to find two or three other people who have likewise come to stay there for fifteen quiet minutes out of this world.

21:1-11. Slavery.—The institution of slavery is of incalculable antiquity, as is seen by the regulations about its abuses both in the Code of Hammurabi and in the book of the covenant. Mankind has always had a bad conscience about it, and many of the earliest historical references to it are attempts to mitigate its admitted evils. Both Greek and Roman civilizations were founded on the implied presence in the body politic of masses of slaves to do the menial work. Both Christianity and Islam for centuries accepted slavery as an inevitable condition of civilized society. Slavery was earnestly discussed by the framers of the Constitution of the United States, but in the end any reference to it was consciously omitted from that document, and Congress was prohibited from abolishing the slave trade for twenty years. The abolition of slavery in British dominions in 1833 was largely the work of humanitarians like Wilberforce, and the Thirteenth Amendment to the Consti-

3 If he came in by himself, he shall go out by himself: if he were married, then his wife shall go out with him.

4 If his master have given him a wife, and she have borne him sons or daughters; the wife and her children shall be her master's, and he shall go out by himself.

5 And if the servant shall plainly say, I love my master, my wife, and my children; I will not go out free:

6 Then his master shall bring him unto the judges; he shall also bring him to the door, or unto the doorpost; and his master shall bore his ear through with an awl; and he shall serve him for ever.

7 ¶ And if a man sell his daughter to be a maidservant, she shall not go out as the menservants do.

go out free, for nothing. 3 If he comes in single, he shall go out single; if he comes in married, then his wife shall go out with him. 4 If his master gives him a wife and she bears him sons or daughters, the wife and her children shall be her master's and he shall go out alone. 5 But if the slave plainly says, 'I love my master, my wife, and my children; I will not go out free,' 6 then his master shall bring him to God, and he shall bring him to the door or the doorpost; and his master shall bore his ear through with an awl; and he shall serve him for life.

7 "When a man sells his daughter as a slave, she shall not go out as the male slaves

3. At the end of his term or, however freed, upon regaining his freedom the slave's status was that of his situation before enslavement. If he had a family at the time of enslavement, his master no longer had a claim upon it. Deut. 15:13-14 adds that the freed slave must be fitted out with gifts of cattle, grain, and wine.

4. A master might give a female slave (but not of the class discussed in vss. 7-11) to a single slave as wife. But on the completion of the slave's six-year term, this wife and the children remained the possession of the master. He shall go out alone.

5-6. If, under such circumstances, a man prefers to maintain his family in slavery rather than to leave them and to go out free he may voluntarily take a vow of perpetual slavery. It seems that a master was obligated to honor such a request. He must bring him to God, i.e., to the altar and shrine of the family or clan. The mutual obligation, witnessed by deity, was marked by boring a hole through the slave's ear with an awl as a mark of his perpetual slavery. This is the only knowledge we have of the marking of Hebrew slaves. In ancient Babylonia slaves had the hair cut in a prescribed manner (Code of Hammurabi 226); and a slave who denied his master had his ear cut off (Code of Hammurabi 282). The boring took place at the door or the doorpost. We are reminded that this was the place which originally was the locus of the Passover sacrifice (12:22). The rite of the boring of the ear is domestic and social at the same time.

7. If an Israelite in financial straits sells his daughter as a slave, she shall not go out as the male slaves do, i.e., she shall not serve for a period of six years or any other tution was passed in 1865; yet the League of Nations in 1926 was still engaged in the work of abolishing slavery.

The RSV gives a clear account of these early attempts to humanize and regulate slavery among the Hebrews. The more advanced regulations in Deut. 15:12-18 testify to even greater moral sensitiveness at the time of the close of the monarchy (see also Lev. 25:39-41, and Exeg. on Jer. 34:8-22 for a case which suggests that these regulations had become something of a dead letter in Israel). Man always shies at the difficulties of abolishing a settled evil institution like slavery or war, and tries for centuries rather to humanize it and mitigate its evils, all in vain, till at last it dawns upon him that the essence of such institutions is inhumanity.

In these times there was no such thing as free labor in the modern sense. Menservants and maidservants were the property of their master. But it must be remembered that freeborn wives and children were also legally under the power of the master of the house. He could sell his children to another Israelite just as well as his slaves. Once admit that one man can "own" another and it becomes apparent that these laws tried to minimize the degradation in the relation of slave to master; the slaves were looked upon as members of the family. Slavery probably started in the human race as a result of 8 If she please not her master, who hath betrothed her to himself, then shall he let her be redeemed: to sell her unto a strange nation he shall have no power, seeing he hath dealt deceitfully with her.

9 And if he have betrothed her unto his son, he shall deal with her after the manner of daughters.

10 If he take him another wife, her food, her raiment, and her duty of marriage, shall he not diminish.

11 And if he do not these three unto her, then shall she go out free without money.

12 ¶ He that smiteth a man, so that he die, shall be surely put to death.

do. 8 If she does not please her master, who has designated her for himself,^s then he shall let her be redeemed; he shall have no right to sell her to a foreign people, since he has dealt faithlessly with her. 9 If he designates her for his son, he shall deal with her as with a daughter. 10 If he takes another wife to himself, he shall not diminish her food, her clothing, or her marital rights. 11 And if he does not do these three things for her, she shall go out for nothing, without payment of money.

12 "Whoever strikes a man so that he

^s Another reading is so that he has not designated her specified time. She shall become a concubine and have the protection due a concubine. In Deut. 15:12, 17 this prohibition of holding female slaves on the same conditions as male slaves seems to be modified. The term here translated slave (אִמָּה) means concubine in 23:12; Gen. 20:17; 21:12; Judg. 9:18; 19:19.

8. If a master decides not to take as a concubine a girl whom he purchased on the assumption that he would, he has dealt faithlessly with her. He must let her be redeemed, i.e., she may become the concubine of another Israelite, with the privileges implied in the original purchase; she may not be sold to a foreigner (nokhri). In Babylonia a husband's concubine could be sold even after she had borne him children (Code of Hammurabi 119).

9. If the purchaser of a girl decides he does not want her as a concubine, or from the first designates her for his son, she must be married to the son of a free woman, i.e., she shall be the son's wife, not his concubine; her purchaser must deal with the girl as with a daughter.

10. In case a man has a slave concubine and then takes another woman, whether concubine or wife (the Hebrew text simply says "another"), he may not deny her the rights guaranteed in the original agreement. These rights are specified.

11. It is often felt that these three things are synonymous with the three rights of the concubine specified in vs. 10. But it seems more sound to treat this statement as a summary of the ways in which a householder may dispose of a girl he purchases: (a) He may take her as a concubine (this is assumed to have been done in vs. 10); (b) he may permit another Israelite to take her as wife or concubine, let her be redeemed (vs. 8); or (c) he may give her to his son as wife (vs. 9). If he does not do these three things for her, she shall be free, without payment of money, i.e., she need not be redeemed.

(b) CAPITAL OFFENSES (21:12-17)

12. The murderer must die; this is the basic law in terms of which all variations and exceptions must be justified. Its principle is the lex talionis (vss. 23-25). This same victory and defeat in war. The slaves of another race did not have as great privileges as the Hebrew slave (see Exeg.). For the position attained by slaves, see I Sam. 9:6 ff., where Saul is indebted to a slave for information and for a loan; I Sam. 25:11 ff., where Abigail follows the advice of a slave rather than that of the master; Gen. 24:1 ff., where Eliezer is almost Isaac's guardian; I Chr. 2:34 ff., where a slave could marry the daughter of the house, and in Gen. 15:2 ff. become the heir. The fact that slaves were circumcised (Gen. 17:12) and partook in family worship (Deut. 12:18) made them brothers in the faith.

12-17. Capital Punishment.—These verses list crimes punishable by death. In Israel stoning was the usual method, though other forms of capital punishment are mentioned. The sentence

13 And if a man lie not in wait, but God deliver him into his hand; then I will appoint thee a place whither he shall flee.

14 But if a man come presumptuously upon his neighbor, to slay him with guile; thou shalt take him from mine altar, that he may die.

dies shall be put to death. 13 But if he did not lie in wait for him, but God let him fall into his hand, then I will appoint for you a place to which he may flee. 14 But if a man willfully attacks another to kill him treacherously, you shall take him from my altar, that he may die.

principle underlies the Code of Hammurabi, in which the first paragraph implies the death penalty for murder.

13. As in the Code of Hammurabi (206-7) and in the Hittite Laws (I. 1-5) a distinction is made in Israel between intentional and unintentional manslaughter. Unintentional killing is described by but God let him fall into his hand. No Moira or Fatum beyond God is made responsible for accidents. However inexplicably, accidents play a part in the divine intention. The words let him fall imply no satisfaction on the part of the slayer; they describe a chance occurrence. I will appoint for you a place refers to the asylum for the unintentional killer. Perhaps originally every altar was such a place of safety, where the "avenger of blood" could not touch him. Later, when the cultus was centralized in Jerusalem and local altars lost their sacred character, secularized places of asylum were appointed (Deut. 4:41; 19:1-13; Num. 35:12). The need for a place of asylum shows that the ancient custom of the blood feud, in which the "avenger" wrought the retribution for murder, had not disappeared and that there was no sure "police protection" everywhere available for the murderer awaiting trial. The Code of Hammurabi does not have the provision for asylum; it was perhaps not needed in ancient Babylonian society.

14. It is assumed that every slayer, also the murderer, will seek the refuge of the altar. In every case the guilt or innocence of the individual will have to be established by legal procedure. The elders of the slayer's community constitute the court (Deut. 21:1-9; I Kings 21:8 ff.). When the person is found guilty of murder he is removed from the sacred area, taken from my altar, to be executed (cf. I Kings 2:28-34). The normal form of execution was stoning. The slayer not guilty of intentional killing in all probability paid a redemption fine for the person whose death he had caused (cf. vs. 30).

was carried out by "the avengers of blood," the kinsfolk of the victim. Murder or accidental homicide are the only two types of killing treated. The idea that a murderer must forfeit his own life is one of the oldest convictions of the human race. The elders of the town or village where the murderer lived must investigate the crime. The idea of criminal solidarity exemplified in 20:5 made it necessary for the town to clear itself of guilt by convicting and executing the offender. This conception is capable of modern applications to the criminal actions of "the kids of Dead End," the slum dwellers to whom the community has never given a chance of decent living. In the earliest times the execution of the murderer was a peace offering made to the restless unsatisfied soul of the dead man. This idea still underlies popular conceptions of capital punishment. "Something must be done to make it right." "We owe it to our dead friend to kill his murderer." However, the ill effects of capital punishment upon those who carry it out and upon the community at large seem to many in modern times to outweigh the satisfaction felt by many people that the criminal has got his due, and thus the public is safeguarded from his further crimes. There are those who hold that capital punishment will fade out of human folkways progressively as communities become unwilling to do the deed and other ways of reforming the criminal are perfected.

13. The Place of Refuge.—The right of asylum, afterwards restricted to six specified cities (Deut. 4:41 ff.; 19:1 ff.), was a necessary precaution where the blood feud was apt to result in lynchings. By such means a chance was given for an orderly trial. Hammurabi lived in a society from which the blood feud had disappeared, and his code knows nothing of the right of asylum. There are today parts of the civilized world which are in a more barbaric condition than society in the times of Moses, where no asylum exists for the victims of the most degraded of blood feuds, that founded on race prejudice.

15 ¶ And he that smiteth his father, or his mother, shall be surely put to death.

16 ¶ And he that stealeth a man, and selleth him, or if he be found in his hand, he shall surely be put to death.

17 ¶ And he that curseth his father, or his mother, shall surely be put to death.

18 ¶ And if men strive together, and one smite another with a stone, or with his fist, and he die not, but keepeth his bed:

15 "Whoever strikes his father or his mother shall be put to death.

16 "Whoever steals a man, whether he sells him or is found in possession of him, shall be put to death.

17 "Whoever curses his father or his mother shall be put to death.

18 "When men quarrel and one strikes the other with a stone or with his fist and the man does not die but keeps his bed, 15, 17. The striking and cursing of parents are put on the same level; a crime in words is as serious as one in deed. This reflects the effectiveness associated with the oath. Death is the punishment in both instances. The death sentence, meted out in both cases, bespeaks the respect for parents inculcated in Israelite society. The central point of this law is that children must obey their parents, as the Deuteronomic expansion of it makes clear (Deut. 21:18-21). In ancient Babylonian society a crime of this type was punished symbolically by cutting off the hand that had struck the parent (Code of Hammurabi 195). It is possible that this symbolic pattern was also at some stages followed in Israel with those who cursed parents (Deut. 27:16). The father and mother are accorded the same status in claiming obedience of children.

16. Manstealing and kidnaping, as well as the sale into slavery of those abducted, were capital offenses. This was also true in the ancient Babylonian code which, however, concentrates on kidnaping (Code of Hammurabi 14). Deut. 24:7 specifies that this penalty applies to the abduction of Israelites.

(c) NONCAPITAL CRIMES (21:18-32)

18-19. The one who injures another in a quarrel must compensate the injured man for his loss of time and also have him thoroughly healed, i.e., pay his medical expenses. The question of whether the blow was delivered with the intention to kill is not raised.

16. Kidnaping.—The modern counterpart of this verse is kidnaping and holding for a ransom; the inhumanity and cruelty of the crime seem almost to merit the severity of the punishment here prescribed. It is still today one of the most highly punishable felonies, and always raises terrific public resentment, as in the cases of Charley Ross in 1874 and Charles A. Lindbergh's son in 1932 (see Gen. 37:26 ff.).

17. The Penalty of Filial Disrespect.—The severity of the punishment for him who curses his father or his mother illustrates the dignity of the status of parent (20:12). The word "to curse" in Hebrew means to make light, reduce the power of, and the word "to honor" means to give weight to, to augment the power of. Cursing, for the ancients, was possessed of real power. Modern life has substituted for it the power of belittlement, as can be seen if one studies the popular stories told about (say) the presidents of the United States in their lifetime. Hammurabi says the hand with which the son struck his parent must be cut off (for the same idea see Prov. 20:20 [RSV]; 30:17). The "General Laws and Liberties of New Plimouth Colony, published in 1671," read: "If any Childe or Children above sixteen years old, and of competent Understanding, shall Curse or Smite their Natural Father or Mother; he or they shall be put to Death, unless it can be sufficiently testified that the Parents have been very Unchristianly negligent in the Education of such Children, or so provoked them by extreme and cruel Correction, that they have been forced thereunto, to preserve themselves from Death or Maiming."⁸ Human progress is very slow, as is seen by the thousands of years it seems to have taken from the time of Moses to the time of the Pilgrim Fathers to exempt children under sixteen from this penalty and introduce the last "unlesses."

18-19. Payment for the Loss of Time.—The just and merciful arrangement of payment for doctor and loss of time (Hammurabi also includes doctor's fee) is the beginning of a long social development leading ultimately to insurance societies, workmen's compensation acts, and compulsory insurance regulations. Cain (Gen. 4:9) asked the question which started it all, and ⁸ Ch. ii, sec. 13. See Compact and Laws of New Plymouth, p. 245.

19 If he rise again, and walk abroad upon his staff, then shall he that smote him be quit: only he shall pay for the loss of his time, and shall cause him to be thoroughly healed.

20 ¶ And if a man smite his servant, or his maid, with a rod, and he die under his hand; he shall be surely punished.

21 Notwithstanding, if he continue a day or two, he shall not be punished: for he is his money.

22 ¶ If men strive, and hurt a woman with child, so that her fruit depart from her, and yet no mischief follow: he shall be surely punished, according as the woman's husband will lay upon him; and he shall pay as the judges determine.

19 then if the man rises again and walks abroad with his staff, he that struck him shall be clear; only he shall pay for the loss of his time, and shall have him thoroughly healed.

20 "When a man strikes his slave, male or female, with a rod and the slave dies under his hand, he shall be punished. 21 But if the slave survives a day or two, he is not to be punished; for the slave is his money.

22 "When men strive together, and hurt a woman with child, so that there is a miscarriage, and yet no harm follows, the one who hurt her shall^b be fined, according as the woman's husband shall lay upon him; and he shall pay as the judges determine.

^b Heb he shall

In the ancient Babylonian code the victim had to take an oath that he did not strike with intent to kill and pay the physician's fee (Code of Hammurabi 206), a fee which was stipulated by state law and varied accordingly to the social class of the patient. Should the patient die a fine would also be imposed. The Hittite Laws (I. 10) assign medical costs to the assailant and in addition put levies upon him to compensate for time lost and for pain endured.

20-21, 26-27. The laws governing the corporal injuring of slaves show the effect of resting on two irreconcilable postulates, i.e., that the slave is a human being, and that he is another man's property. If a master strikes a slave so that the latter dies under his hand, he must be punished for destroying a human life, probably by paying a fine. If, however, the slave survives a day or two and then dies, there is no punishment. The loss of property by death is equal to the fine to fit the crime!

Destroying a slave's eye or breaking his teeth also constitutes an injury that draws a fine equal to the slave's value. Hence, the slave is set free. In Babylonia if a third party struck a slave, causing similar injuries, a fine was paid to the owner of the slave (Code of Hammurabi 199).

22. The men fighting might presumably hurt a woman with child while she was making an effort to separate them (Deut. 25:11). If the woman does not lose her life as a result of the miscarriage there shall be a fine to compensate for the loss of the unborn society is not yet sure of the scope of the real answer.

20-21. Ancient Severity and Gradual Humanity.—In respect of striking there was a great difference between the status of the freeman and the slave. But vs. 20-21 and 26-27 must be read with the understanding that they were mitigations of the more primitive customs which gave the master absolute power of life and death over his slaves. They probably went as far as public opinion at that time would stand; more merciful laws would not have been obeyed, as they would have been thought to undermine the master's power too radically. The rod was believed in those times to be necessary to enforce discipline and obedience (Prov. 10:13; 13:24). If the slave dies as he is being flogged the master must be punished, but not by death, as no master could deliberately plan to destroy his own property; in fact, if the slave did not actually die in the flogging but survived for a day or so, then the loss of his slave was deemed sufficient punishment for the master. If bodily injury resulted, the loss of an eye or a tooth, then the principle of tit for tat (vs. 23-25) did not apply as he was only a slave; but instead, the slave should receive his freedom (vs. 26-27). These laws were more humane than even those of Hammurabi.

22-25. Eye for Eye, Tooth for Tooth.—This lex talionis is inserted as a quotation from still more ancient codifications of the laws of the people. It was a universal principle with all the nations bordering on the Mediterranean Sea,

23 And if any mischief follow, then thou shalt give life for life,

24 Eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot, 25 Burning for burning, wound for wound, stripe for stripe.

26 ¶ And if a man smite the eye of his servant, or the eye of his maid, that it perish; he shall let him go free for his eye's sake.

27 And if he smite out his manservant's tooth, or his maidservant's tooth; he shall let him go free for his tooth's sake.

28 ¶ If an ox gore a man or a woman, that they die: then the ox shall be surely stoned, and his flesh shall not be eaten; but the owner of the ox shall be quit.

29 But if the ox were wont to push with his horn in time past, and it hath been testified to his owner, and he hath not kept him in, but that he hath killed a man or a

23 If any harm follows, then you shall give life for life, 24 eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot, 25 burn for burn, wound for wound, stripe for stripe.

26 "When a man strikes the eye of his slave, male or female, and destroys it, he shall let the slave go free for the eye's sake.

27 If he knocks out the tooth of his slave, male or female, he shall let the slave go free for the tooth's sake.

28 "When an ox gores a man or a woman to death, the ox shall be stoned, and its flesh shall not be eaten; but the owner of the ox shall be clear. 29 But if the ox has been accustomed to gore in the past, and its owner has been warned but has not kept it in, child. The amount of the fine is set by the husband. As the judges determine renders the Hebrew word בַּפְּלִיּוֹת, which some scholars, following Budde, conjecturally emend to בַּנְּפִילִים, "for the miscarriage." But it does not seem meaningless to read the text as it stands and think of the judges as passing on the fairness of the demand made by the husband (cf. vs. 30).

23-25. This classic statement of the lex talionis, repeated in Lev. 24:19-20 and Deut. 19:21, is presented as the continuation of the case of miscarriage through injury by means of the phrase if any harm follows (cf. vs. 22). Beer (Exodus, p. 111), however, thinks it should follow vs. 18-19 on the ground that, while the former makes provisions for atonement for temporary damages, this statement relates to permanent injuries that cannot be healed except by retaliation. That the wicked must suffer for his deeds is the assumption underlying the law. The principle is widely held in ancient society, notably in the Code of Hammurabi.

26-27. See Exeg. on vs. 20-21, 26-27, p. 999.

28. The owner of cattle is responsible for the injury they may inflict upon human beings. In the Code of Hammurabi (250-52) the ox is also used to illustrate this principle. The injury such an animal may cause constitutes a crime only if its owner is proved guilty of "criminal negligence." If the animal, having no record of meanness, gores a person to death, it must be stoned, and its flesh must not be eaten. The flesh of the animal has acquired the taboo of bloodguilt and must therefore not be touched; the pattern for the treatment of guilt in human beings is applied to the animal.

29. But if the ox has been accustomed to gore, the owner would be guilty of gross negligence and of murdering the person the ox has killed. He is subject to the death penalty.

and represents a step toward the humanizing of acts of revenge, limiting them to tit for tat, no more. It is curious that the principle that the bad must be punished for his badness is much older than the idea that the good must be rewarded for his goodness. This is perhaps due to an early conviction that badness is abnormal, that goodness is just normality and takes care of itself (Lev. 24:19 ff.; Deut. 19:21; Matt. 5:38 ff.).

26-27. See Expos. on vs. 20-21.

28-36. Indirect Responsibility.—The ox was looked upon as a murderer and its flesh was unclean (Gen. 9:5; see Arthur Train, "The Dog Andrew" in Mr. Tuttle's Case Book *). The woman; the ox shall be stoned, and his owner also shall be put to death.

* New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1936, pp. 174-200.

30 If there be laid on him a sum of money, then he shall give for the ransom of his life whatsoever is laid upon him.

31 Whether he have gored a son, or have gored a daughter, according to this judgment shall it be done unto him.

32 If the ox shall push a manservant or a maidservant; he shall give unto their master thirty shekels of silver, and the ox shall be stoned.

33 ¶ And if a man shall open a pit, or if a man shall dig a pit, and not cover it, and an ox or an ass fall therein;

34 The owner of the pit shall make it good, and give money unto the owner of them; and the dead beast shall be his.

35 ¶ And if one man's ox hurt another's, that he die; then they shall sell the live ox, and divide the money of it; and the dead ox also they shall divide.

and it kills a man or a woman, the ox shall be stoned, and its owner also shall be put to death. 30 If a ransom is laid on him, then he shall give for the redemption of his life whatever is laid upon him. 31 If it gores a man's son or daughter, he shall be dealt with according to this same rule. 32 If the ox gores a slave, male or female, the owner shall give to their master thirty shekels of silver, and the ox shall be stoned.

33 "When a man leaves a pit open, or when a man digs a pit and does not cover it, and an ox or an ass falls into it, 34 the owner of the pit shall make it good; he shall give money to its owner, and the dead beast shall be his.

35 "When one man's ox hurts another's, so that it dies, then they shall sell the live ox and divide the price of it; and the dead

30. He may pay for his life by means of a ransom, the sum of which is set by the next of kin of the slain man under proper legal controls (cf. vs. 22).

31. If the ox has killed minors the case must also be settled according to this same rule, the death penalty with an implicit recommendation for substitution by ransom payments.

32. The owner of a slave killed by an ox is to be compensated for his slave according to the market price for a slave. The same holds true in the Code of Hammurabi. The slave is treated as property; but the stoning of the ox (cf. vs. 28) reminds one that he is also a human being.

(d) LAWS SECURING PROPERTY RIGHTS (21:33-22:17 [Hebrew 16])

33-34. Pits might be either cisterns or wells; animals would be killed by the fall. The provision that the owner of the pit shall make it good probably refers to the earlier custom of providing a substitute animal. This was later changed to a money payment. For a time, no doubt, the owner had the option to decide the manner of restitution. The dead carcass was now the property of the man who had paid for his neglect. He could use the hide. Perhaps in ancient times the meat was eaten, but with the rise of laws forbidding the eating of blood this was afterward no longer possible. In Deut. 14:21 sojourners in Israel still seem to be outside the law respecting dead animals.

35-36. If an ox kills another ox, the two owners must equally bear the loss. Only if the owner of the ox that killed the other has been guilty of negligence is he alone responsible for all the damage.

owner, if he had been careless, was not included in the list of criminals punishable by death, as apparently the usual custom was to pay a ransom for his life (vs. 30). The animals that kill men today are not oxen but tiny organisms, germs of disease. If the possessors of these are careless in spreading them around, they too should be put to death, or charged a very high ransom.

The tempo, the customs, the scale of life have changed, but the same essential dangers exist unchanged, to be met by the same justice and foresight and magnanimity.

In law and morals one of the early truths recognized was that it is a man's responsibility to take care that his acts and example do not dig pits (vs. 33) into which the innocent may fall 36 Or if it be known that the ox hath used to push in time past, and his owner hath not kept him in; he shall surely pay ox for ox; and the dead shall be his own.

22 If a man shall steal an ox, or a sheep, and kill it, or sell it; he shall restore five oxen for an ox, and four sheep for a sheep.

2 ¶ If a thief be found breaking up, and be smitten that he die, there shall no blood be shed for him.

3 If the sun be risen upon him, there shall be blood shed for him; for he should make full restitution: if he have nothing, then he shall be sold for his theft.

4 If the theft be certainly found in his hand alive, whether it be ox, or ass, or sheep; he shall restore double.

beast also they shall divide. 36 Or if it is known that the ox has been accustomed to gore in the past, and its owner has not kept it in, he shall pay ox for ox, and the dead beast shall be his.

22 ⁱ "If a man steals an ox or a sheep, and kills it or sells it, he shall pay five oxen for an ox, and four sheep for a sheep. ¹He shall make restitution; if he has nothing, then he shall be sold for his theft. ⁴If the stolen beast is found alive in his possession, whether it is an ox or an ass or a sheep, he shall pay double.

2^k "If a thief is found breaking in, and is struck so that he dies, there shall be no bloodguilt for him; ^{3a} but if the sun has risen upon him, there shall be bloodguilt for him.

⁴ Ch 21. 37 in Heb

¹ Restoring verses 3b and 4 to their place immediately following verse 1

^k Ch 22. 1 in Heb

22:1-4. These verses constitute a section on the thief. Vss. 1, 3b, 4 provide for restitution of and penalties for stolen animals. Vss. 2-3a discuss the right of an owner to slay the thief whom he discovers in the act of stealing his property.

1 (Hebrew 21:37). The penalties for stealing an ox or sheep are determined by the principle of multiple restitution, fivefold for the ox, fourfold for the sheep (cf. II Sam. 12:4, where, however, LXX reads "sevenfold"). The higher penalty for the ox may be due to the fact that it was more apt to be stolen, being used as a draft animal. The Code of Hammurabi (8) has a much higher restitution ratio, ranging all the way from ten to thirty.

3b. The thief who had not sold his stolen goods when he was apprehended received milder treatment (cf. vss. 7, 9). In the Code of Hammurabi (120, 124, 160) the double restitution principle is applied to cases of broken trust, but not in instances of outright theft.

2. The basic principle is that an owner is justified in killing a thief whom he finds in the act of breaking in. The Hebrew verb indicates that the thief broke in by means of digging through the walls of a town or house. It is possible to interpret this verse so as to assume that all breaking in occurred during the night, or as Beer does (Exodus, p. 113), that originally this provision allowed no exceptions, whether the theft was committed by day or night.

3a. Beer interprets this as a later qualification of the law in vs. 2, justifying the slaying of a thief caught in the act. Preferably this law should be interpreted to mean that a thief may be slain with impunity only when caught in the act of stealing. The assumption is that a thief does his business at night. If the sun has risen upon him, some time later, he may not be killed. But this interpretation, as well as Beer's, rests on a different rendering from that of the RSV. The difficult Hebrew phrase dāmim lô is translated by the RSV as bloodguilt for him in both vs. 2 and vs. 3a. In vs. 2 this clearly

(for further regulations as to the disposal of the carcass see Lev. 17:15; Deut. 14:21).

In vss. 35-36 is another example of rough justice out of which have developed all the laws and regulations of modern life about road accidents with automobiles, mad dogs, and all the complicated contents of those learned volumes seen in every lawyer's bookshelf upon "the law of torts." They are founded on the belief that "a man is answerable for the 'natural and proba-

5 ¶ If a man shall cause a field or vineyard to be eaten, and shall put in his beast, and shall feed in another man's field; of the best of his own field, and of the best of his own vineyard, shall he make restitution.

6 ¶ If fire break out, and catch in thorns, so that the stacks of corn, or the standing corn, or the field, be consumed therewith; he that kindled the fire shall surely make restitution.

7 ¶ If a man shall deliver unto his neighbor money or stuff to keep, and it be stolen out of the man's house; if the thief be found, let him pay double.

8 If the thief be not found, then the master of the house shall be brought unto the judges, to see whether he have put his hand unto his neighbor's goods.

5 "When a man causes a field or vineyard to be grazed over, or lets his beast loose and it feeds in another man's field, he shall make restitution from the best in his own field and in his own vineyard.

6 "When fire breaks out and catches in thorns so that the stacked grain or the standing grain or the field is consumed, he that kindled the fire shall make full restitution.

7 "If a man delivers to his neighbor money or goods to keep, and it is stolen out of the man's house, then, if the thief is found, he shall pay double. 8 If the thief is not found, the owner of the house shall come near to God, to show whether or not he has put his hand to his neighbor's goods.

means that with respect to the slaying of the thief there is no guilt upon the slayer. The point of vs. 3a is that after the sun has risen upon him the thief's case is altered whether because he is no longer in the act of stealing or because he is doing it by daylight (cf. LXX).

5. The law presupposes the small owner-operated farm. In Babylonia the principle of making restitution for damage done to fields and crops was also in operation (Code of Hammurabi 55, 65), but the provisions reflect the tenant status of the individual farmer. There the custom of assessing fines of this sort on the basis of yield of adjacent land, or of the best in his own field, was apparently already giving way to the statistical standard based on the average yield per measure of land (Code of Hammurabi 56-58).

6. The case of damage by fire calls for the application of the same principle: he that kindled the fire shall make full restitution. In Babylonia, where irrigation was a high art, most of the examples are drawn from cases involving carelessness or neglect respecting the canals (Code of Hammurabi 53-56).

7-8. The simplicity and informality of Israelite society is revealed by the fact that the man who wants to put goods in storage gives them into the keeping of his neighbor.

ble' consequences of his acts; i.e., such consequences as a reasonable man in his place should have foreseen as probable." ⁵

22:5-15. More Cases of Indirect Responsibility.—It is hard to understand the Hebrew word in vs. 5—some guess it means cause to be grazed over, others, "cause to be burned over." The fact that the Code of Hammurabi (57) has a regulation about sheep feeding on another man's land inclines one to think that these verses refer first to the wandering herds and then to the wandering flames (vs. 6). Both the LXX and the Samar. texts make things a little plainer by inserting after the words another man's field this sentence: "He shall make compensation from his own field according to the produce thereof, and if he has caused the whole field to be eaten. . . ." Then follow, as in our text, the words, from the best in his own field. The modern cattle who graze "off the lot" are the prospectors and investors who long for the better grazing in other lands and then must be protected by the armed forces of the homeland.

⁵ Frederick Pollock, "Tort," Encyclopaedia Britannica, XXII, 307.

The plight of the man who lights a pile of rubbish on his own land and sees it fanned by the wind till it spreads in flames toward his neighbor's property has given heart failure to farmers of all generations. War spreads just like the flames from one country to another, and the awful moment is just as poignant when one waits and fears to see the buildings of a neighbor burst into that frightful blaze.

8. "So Help Me God."—This coming before God is also the expression used in a like case by Hammurabi, but there was in the code a 9 For all manner of trespass, whether it be for ox, for ass, for sheep, for raiment, or for any manner of lost thing, which another challengeth to be his, the cause of both parties shall come before the judges; and whom the judges shall condemn, he shall pay double unto his neighbor.

10 If a man deliver unto his neighbor an ass, or an ox, or a sheep, or any beast, to keep; and it die, or be hurt, or driven away, no man seeing it:

11 Then shall an oath of the LORD be between them both, that he hath not put his hand unto his neighbor's goods; and the owner of it shall accept thereof, and he shall not make it good.

12 And if it be stolen from him, he shall make restitution unto the owner thereof.

13 If it be torn in pieces, then let him

9 "For every breach of trust, whether it is for ox, for ass, for sheep, for clothing, or for any kind of lost thing, of which one says, 'This is it,' the case of both parties shall come before God; he whom God shall condemn shall pay double to his neighbor.

10 "If a man delivers to his neighbor an ass or an ox or a sheep or any beast to keep, and it dies or is hurt or is driven away, without any one seeing it, 11 an oath by the LORD shall be between them both to see whether he has not put his hand to his neighbor's property; and the owner shall accept the oath, and he shall not make restitution. 12 But if it is stolen from him, he shall make restitution to its owner. 13 If it is torn by beasts, let him bring it as evi-

In Babylonia the wardens of goods in storage undertake their responsibility with the aid of an inventory-contract and witnesses (Code of Hammurabi 122). In Israel no such formality seems to have existed. A thief who is caught with goods stolen from storage must make double restitution (vs. 4). If the thief is not found, the neighbor to whom the goods were entrusted comes under suspicion. He must come near to God to convince the owner of the goods that he is innocent. Beer's suggestion (Exodus, p. 114) that the decision was by means of an oracle cannot be ruled out absolutely, but it seems that an oath was commonly taken in such cases (cf. vs. 11; I Kings 8:31-32). The possibility that the owner of the goods may be making false claims is not dealt with here, but the following verse is aware of it and provides for the right to challenge false claims.

9. A single principle covers cases of failure in trusteeship and false claims. The party who lies is to be treated as a thief, i.e., he shall pay double to his fellow (Code of Hammurabi 1-4). This holds also for articles found whose ownership is in doubt, and which are claimed by more than one party.

10-11. The case of animals entrusted to others rests on the same principle as holds for goods put in storage. But account is taken of the fact that animals can die or be hurt. Death or injury from natural causes involves no obligation for whoever has the animals in his care. It is possible that the Hebrew for driven away is a dittography for is hurt. If no one saw the manner of the death or injury of the animal concerned, the custodian of the animal must take an oath that he has not put his hand to his neighbor's property. Instead of the oath by the LORD, the LXX reads "oath of God." The RSV reads the owner shall accept the oath. The Hebrew phrase welāqah be'ālāw has also been taken to mean that the owner will accept the dead or injured animal, signifying thereby that he is satisfied and considers the case closed (McNeile, Exodus, p. 133; cf. Beer, Exodus, p. 114). This seems a much more significant interpretation of the phrase than that given in the RSV. To accept the oath is implicit in the manner of settling the issue and needs no elaboration.

12. The demand for restitution of animals lost by theft must be compared with the exemption from restitution of stored goods that have been stolen (vs. 8). The implication is that a shepherd or herdsman is constantly with the cattle and would, if responsible, make theft impossible.

13. If the herdsman can produce a part of the animal torn by beasts, it is proof that he was on the alert (I Sam. 17:35; see Amos 3:12), even though he may have been bring it for witness, and he shall not make good that which was torn.

14 ¶ And if a man borrow ought of his neighbor, and it be hurt, or die, the owner thereof being not with it, he shall surely make it good.

15 But if the owner thereof be with it, he shall not make it good: if it be a hired thing, it came for his hire.

16 ¶ And if a man entice a maid that is not betrothed, and lie with her, he shall surely endow her to be his wife.

17 If her father utterly refuse to give her unto him, he shall pay money according to the dowry of virgins.

dence; he shall not make restitution for what has been torn.

14 "If a man borrows anything of his neighbor, and it is hurt or dies, the owner not being with it, he shall make full restitution. 15 If the owner was with it, he shall not make restitution; if it was hired, it came for its hire.¹

16 "If a man seduces a virgin who is not betrothed, and lies with her, he shall give the marriage present for her, and make her his wife. 17 If her father utterly refuses to give her to him, he shall pay money equivalent to the marriage present for virgins.

¹ Or it is reckoned in (Heb comes into) its hire unable to save it from the bear or the lion. Since he acted responsibly, no restitution need be made.

14-15. The Hebrew has only "If a man borrows of his fellow." One text of the LXX and the Syriac version insert "animal" (Amer. Trans.) and the Vulg. inserts "any of these," the substance of which is adopted in the RSV. However, the following phrase, is hurt or dies, speaks in favor of "animal." Restitution of a borrowed item implies abuse of it. Therefore, if the owner, who would oppose abuse of his own property, were present, no restitution could be demanded. The translation in the RSV of the last clause interprets it as making a distinction between a rented article and a borrowed article. In the case of the rented item restitution for damage or death in the absence of the owner cannot be sought, it is implied, since the rental is meant to absorb such losses, it is reckoned in its hire. It is possible, however, to translate the Hebrew in such a way as to continue the case of the borrowed item, viz., "If it was a hireling [who did the damage] it comes into his hire," i.e., the cost of restitution would be taken out of his wages.

16-17. Laws dealing with marriage and the family are missing in the Covenant Code proper. Many students feel that Deut. 22:13-26, made up of such laws, was originally a part of the code but later became misplaced. The provision regarding the seduction of the unbetrothed virgin appears here with the laws concerning the security of property. The central concern of the law is not marriage but the payment of the marriage present. This, according to the Deuteronomic form of the law, amounted to fifty shekels. It was assumed that she became the wife of her seducer, though in exceptional cases the father written receipt to help keep things straight between depositor and conservator. There is some question whether God was invoked in the house or at a special sanctuary, also how the test of the veracity of the defendant was made. Perhaps it was a simple asseveration as in vs. 11, or some such ceremony as in Num. 5:11-31, or sacred lots (I Sam. 14:41). The lie detector of our day is the most recent of a long series of attempts made by the race to decide whether or not a person is telling the truth.

16. Concerning Seduction.—The principle underlying this regulation is that a daughter is the property of her father. The seducer has cheated the father of the money he could have received for her when she was married. Up to the twentieth century, English law on this question was founded on the same idea that the value of the girl to her father is the basis for action. He has to prove, however, if she is over twenty-one, that she rendered actual service to him. Even such slight services as making tea for him or looking after the children are recognized as a basis for a suit. In the United States the woman usually can bring suit herself, but must prove deceit or breach of promise.

It has been generally thought that the honor of the family demands that the man shall marry the girl, thus leading to "shotgun weddings"; the fact that these so often turn out unhappily has brought many to doubt the wisdom of such forced marriages unless both parties are given time to decide of their own free will. The stigma of illegitimacy, if a child is involved, is of less 18 ¶ Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live.

19 ¶ Whosoever lieth with a beast shall surely be put to death.

20 ¶ He that sacrificeth unto any god, save unto the LORD only, he shall be utterly destroyed.

18 "You shall not permit a sorceress to live.

19 "Whoever lies with a beast shall be put to death.

20 "Whoever sacrifices to any god, save to the LORD only, shall be utterly destroyed.

might withhold her. In the Assyrian Code (A55) the case is treated in precisely the same way, except that the price is three times the normal marriage price.

(3) MORAL AND RELIGIOUS LAWS (22:18-23:9)

This second division of the social code is palpably permeated by the spirit of Israelite religion to an extent not discernible in the first half.

(a) CAPITAL OFFENSES (22:18-20)

18. The condemnation of the sorceress is in the apodictic form in which the Decalogue is written. For the most part sorcery is considered a preoccupation of women (I Sam. 28; Jer. 7:18; 44:15), but sorcerers are also mentioned (Deut. 18:10; Mal. 3:5). There were periodic efforts to stamp out all sorts of divination and witchcraft (I Sam. 28:3), but forms of it continued throughout the entire biblical period, and indeed into modern times. This verse was used to justify the punishment of witchcraft in the Middle Ages and in early New England. Sorcery constitutes a denial of the freedom and unity of God.

19. Bestiality is punishable by death, both for men and women (Lev. 20:15-16; Deut. 27:21). The Hittite laws have similar prohibitions (II. 187, 199, 200A), but it is not dealt with in the Babylonian code.

20. Only Yahweh may be worshiped in sacrifices. Transgressors are put under the sacred ban (hêrem) and destroyed as in an auto da fé (cf. Deut. 13:13-18). The commandment reiterates and clarifies 20:3, 23. For a long time the same ban applied to captives and booty taken in war (cf. I Sam. 15:8 ff.).

import in modern life than the mismatched couple. In all such cases hasty action should be avoided and the best arrangement should be worked out for all three parties, father, mother, and child.

18. Witchcraft.—This and the following capital offense have been included throughout the ages in most codes of law.⁶ Sorcery generally consists in superstitious rites connected with earlier forms of religion now discarded. But the religion of Yahweh demanded absolute loyalty, and to participate in other cults was regarded as religious high treason, punishable by death. The persecution of witches throughout the ages, for which this verse has to bear much of the responsibility (see Chancy's report cited in Willison), was due to many causes: the fact that the gods of an older religion generally become the devils of the new religion; etc. There is always evil and misfortune in life and it must be blamed on somebody. The easiest person on whom to blame it is the old woman who is observed engaging in some ancient religious cult, gathering herbs, mumbling spells, and making brews. Just as the Nazis blamed the Jews for all their ills, and we must have a two-party system in order to have the other party to blame, so ancient people vented all their hate and fear on these old women, and sometimes on younger ones, who were often persuaded by their neighbors that they did possess strange powers. The attempt to scare and exploit fellow human beings by the assumption of supernatural powers is found not merely in some church circles today, but in all fields.⁷ Note the superstitious faith many hold in the infallibility of the scientific method, "Scientific truth is exact, but it is incomplete and penultimate; [it] floats in a medium of mythology."⁸

⁶ See Willison, Saints and Strangers, pp. 359-60; Compact and Laws of New Plymouth, p. 244.

20. The Danger of Distorted Emphasis.—This verse must bear some of the blame for the religious wars of history and for sectarian bigotry

⁷ See Thurman Arnold, The Folklore of Capitalism (New Haven: Yale University Press, 1937), pp. 79-82.

⁸ José Ortega Gasset, Toward a Philosophy of History (New York: W. W. Norton, 1941), p. 15.

21 ¶ Thou shalt neither vex a stranger, nor oppress him: for ye were strangers in the land of Egypt.

22 ¶ Ye shall not afflict any widow, or fatherless child.

23 If thou afflict them in any wise, and they cry at all unto me, I will surely hear their cry;

24 And my wrath shall wax hot, and I will kill you with the sword; and your wives shall be widows, and your children fatherless.

25 ¶ If thou lend money to any of my people that is poor by thee, thou shalt not 21 "You shall not wrong a stranger or oppress him, for you were strangers in the land of Egypt. 22 You shall not afflict any widow or orphan. 23 If you do afflict them, and they cry out to me, I will surely hear their cry; 24 and my wrath will burn, and I will kill you with the sword, and your wives shall become widows and your children fatherless.

25 "If you lend money to any of my peo-

(b) HUMANE AND PIOUS DUTIES (22:21-31)

21. The alien (gér) whose protection is here guaranteed is a permanent resident in the community. He is to be differentiated from the foreigner (nokhrí), though he may in some cases be of foreign origin, and also from the stranger (zār), though his ways may in some cases be different. The term must be understood in the light of the originally normative organization of society by tribes and clans. Anyone not related by blood to a particular tribe or clan, but permanently associated with it and under its protection, was a gér. The classification was tribal and social, not primarily religious. The Levite priest of Micah was a gér (Judg. 17:7-13); and the Beerothites, who were surely Yahwists, of the tribe of Benjamin, were "residing" in Gittaim (II Sam. 4:3). The word points out a resident who is not indigenous to a place and who is ethnically unrelated to its people; the other distinctions it may occasionally have are derived from this. The verse is repeated with slight variations in 23:9.

22-24. God himself provides justice for the widows and orphans, as well as for the alien (Deut. 10:18-19). If Israelites should stand in the way of that justice by afflicting them, their own wives and children will be widowed and orphaned; the principle of the lex talionis is embodied in the law and the warning. Israel's protection of the weak was not a novel concern in the ancient world. In the conclusion of his famous code, Hammurabi boasts that with the help of his gods he has seen to it that under his rule the strong did not oppress the weak, and the widows and orphans were given justice (Hugo Gressmann, Altorientalische Texte zum Alten Testament [2nd ed; Berlin: Walter de Gruyter, 1926], p. 407). What is uniquely stressed here is the immediate and dynamic role the God of Israel plays in this concern for and accomplishment of justice. He is directly related to the historical process and has not, like an absentee, entrusted his work to an agent, such as Hammurabi, who can play an independent role.

25-27. The admonition—none of these "humane and pious duties" (vss. 21-31) are laws in a strict sense—not to demand interest from a poor fellow Israelite is to be closely today. See Expos. on 20:3 for what is good in the command, but remember that in religious and international affairs the first step toward peace, and indeed toward truth, takes place when each group escapes from the notion that nothing but its own theory is correct.

21-24. A Wider Mercy.—The constantly reiterated commands to be merciful to strangers, widows, etc., testify to the miserable condition of the weak and helpless in Israel. The grounds given for charity are religious, as in many ancient codes—which suggests that it is historically true that more good has been done in the world by those who set out to love God than by those who set out to love man. If you set out to do other people good, it is difficult to avoid feeling that you are able to do them good because you are better than they are. As Kierkegaard is always insisting, it is through seeing God that everything human becomes really human.

25-27. "Neither Shall You Exact Interest."—The Bible consistently forbids the Jews to take interest from their own people (Deut. 23:20; be to him as a usurer, neither shalt thou lay upon him usury.

26 If thou at all take thy neighbor's raiment to pledge, thou shalt deliver it unto him by that the sun goeth down:

27 For that is his covering only, it is his raiment for his skin: wherein shall he sleep? and it shall come to pass, when he crieth unto me, that I will hear; for I am gracious.

28 ¶ Thou shalt not revile the gods, nor curse the ruler of thy people.

29 ¶ Thou shalt not delay to offer the first of thy ripe fruits, and of thy liquors: the firstborn of thy sons shalt thou give unto me.

ple with you who is poor, you shall not be to him as a creditor, and you shall not exact interest from him. 26 If ever you take your neighbor's garment in pledge, you shall restore it to him before the sun goes down; 27 for that is his only covering, it is his mantle for his body; in what else shall he sleep? And if he cries to me, I will hear, for I am compassionate.

28 "You shall not revile God, nor curse a ruler of your people.

29 "You shall not delay to offer from the fullness of your harvest and from the outflow of your presses.

"The first-born of your sons you shall associated, in its original form, with the provision about pledges in vss. 26-27. It is possible that the last clause, you shall not exact interest from him, is an explanatory gloss added to define creditor (cf. Deut. 23:19). The real point is that in his relations with a poor man, possibly his own employee, an Israelite must be generous. If he gives him an advance payment on his wage, he must not insist on payment by the end of the day at the risk of the man's doing without the garment he has given as pledge for the loan (vs. 26). The original admonition was not so much a prohibition of interest as a demand that one be ready to "risk an advance" without material security. Amos 2:6 condemns Israelites for having treated such advances in a strictly legal manner, even at the cost of making the poor destitute. As a barter economy developed into a money economy the problem of interest became increasingly acute (Deut. 23:19-20; Lev. 25:26); between Israelites interest on commercial loans was prohibited. (In Hebrew the word "interest" means "bite"!) To take a neighbor's garment in pledge for any time longer than the working hours of the day, when he does not wear it, is equivalent to making him pledge his life (cf. Deut. 24:6, 17). This prohibition ultimately makes enslavement for debt impossible.

28. Revile and curse represent two Hebrew words closely synonymous. Blasphemy was punished by death (Lev. 24:15-16). Beer (Exodus, p. 123) feels that the association of lese majesty with blasphemy presupposes the Davidic monarchy. The cursing of the ruler was a capital crime in the monarchic period (II Sam. 16:9; I Kings 2:8-9; 21:10).

29a. This provision, which must be interpreted as the offering of the first fruits, is stated in the briefest form in Hebrew, "You must not delay your produce and your juice." The produce refers to grains and the juice to grapes and, probably, olives. Later, at least, the amount was set at a tenth of the yield (Deut. 14:22; 26:1-12). The system

Lev. 25:36; Prov. 28:8). This has always been an awkward point with "influential" Christians, and has led to the word used here being translated usury in the KJV and the Vulg. Even the article on "Banks" in the Encyclopaedia Britannica states that interest was never forbidden to the Jews. Ruskin's example in refusing to take interest and spending only his capital is related in Fors Clavigera. But Deuteronomy expressly permits the charging of interest to strangers, and what the Bible means is that it is both awkward and embarrassing to have business relations with near relatives—better give to your relatives than lend to them. But the whole history of the prejudice against exacting interest as told by an author like Sombart is interesting. The best tip in the financial market is that the only absolutely safe loan is one made to the Lord, and that we lend to him by giving to the poor (Prov. 19:17).⁹

29. The Role of the First-Born.—This passage sounds as if Yahweh demanded human sacrifice.

⁹ We might all strive to be worthy of the epitaph on a tombstone in a colored servants' graveyard at Coopers-town, N. Y.: "Jennie York, Died Feb. 22, 1837, at 50 yrs. She had her faults but was kind to the poor."

30 Likewise shalt thou do with thine oxen, and with thy sheep: seven days it shall be with his dam; on the eighth day thou shalt give it me.

31 ¶ And ye shall be holy men unto me: neither shall ye eat any flesh that is torn of beasts in the field; ye shall cast it to the dogs.

23 Thou shalt not raise a false report: put not thine hand with the wicked to be an unrighteous witness.

give to me. 30 You shall do likewise with your oxen and with your sheep: seven days it shall be with its dam; on the eighth day you shall give it to me.

31 "You shall be men consecrated to me; therefore you shall not eat any flesh that is torn by beasts in the field; you shall cast it to the dogs.

23 "You shall not utter a false report. You shall not join hands with a wicked man, to be a malicious witness.

of the tithe in later Israel rested on this originally agricultural custom (cf. 23:19a; 34:26a). The LXX interprets the provision to mean "first fruits."

29b. As the offering of tithes is made to recognize God's title to the land, so the offering of the first-born of man and beast shows that they too are his. The manner in which the first-born of your sons shall be given to God is not discussed here (cf. 13:1-2, 11-16). The admonition is as terse as that respecting the first fruits; both presuppose that the way of offering is known. It is therefore hardly justifiable to use this provision in support of a view, sometimes advanced, that in early Israel the physical life of every first-born male child was devoted to God. The custom of slaying the first-born was at certain times probably very common (Ezek. 20:26; Mic. 6:7), but there is no good evidence that it was ever specifically demanded by the law of Yahweh. Ezekiel and Micah refer to the practice as an illustration of a lack of faith, implying that it is a recent aberration. The forms of redemption by which this law was fulfilled, at least in later times, are set out under 12:1-2, 11-16.

30. The first-born male of oxen and sheep was to be offered on the eighth day. This offering was in the form of a sacrificial meal in which Yahweh shared. The provision that this must take place on the eighth day stands in the way, it is felt, of identifying Passover and the offering of the first-born as a single rite (cf. Beer, Exodus, p. 71). The first-born of all animals except the ox and the sheep could be redeemed (Num. 18:15-17). This makes the stipulation of the day on which these were to be sacrificed necessary, though this explanatory note may be of later origin.

31. It is a very ancient and very general custom among pastoral nomads to refuse to eat animals of their flock or herd that have been torn by wild beasts. The flesh is rendered taboo because of the evil power represented by the wild animal. This taboo was in all probability current in Israel from the earliest times. But here its meaning has been changed: You shall be men consecrated to me. Israelites must not eat the unclean or blood because of their relation to Yahweh. The practice is omitted in relation to the sanctity within which Israel lives rather than the taboo standing over against it. It seems impossible to say with certainty how long before the era of the Levitical Code (Lev. 7:24-27; 17:15 [H]) this reorientation took place.

(c) THE SPIRIT OF JUSTICE (23:1-9)

This group of principles and admonitions—they are scarcely laws—are held together by the fact that their main purpose is to create the moral attitudes which shall permeate

Elsewhere substitution for the first-born is permitted (34:20). But the story of the proposed sacrifice of Isaac would not have been told except to discourage a custom which already existed. Either we have in these verses a vestigial part of a more ancient religion such as was preserved by the witches, or a custom of neighboring tribes which Israel was apt to copy. The idea here is one of the origins of the special privileges of the eldest child throughout history (see Jer. 7:31; 19:5; Ezek. 20:25-26).

23:1-9. Nonconductors of Evil.—The substance of these verses (for detailed analysis see the Exeg.) might be expressed simply: Watch

2 ¶ Thou shalt not follow a multitude to do evil; neither shalt thou speak in a cause to decline after many to wrest judgment:

3 ¶ Neither shalt thou countenance a poor man in his cause.

4 ¶ If thou meet thine enemy's ox or his ass going astray, thou shalt surely bring it back to him again.

5 If thou see the ass of him that hateth thee lying under his burden, and wouldest forbear to help him, thou shalt surely help with him.

2 You shall not follow a multitude to do evil; nor shall you bear witness in a suit, turning aside after a multitude, so as to pervert justice; 3 nor shall you be partial to a poor man in his suit.

4 "If you meet your enemy's ox or his ass going astray, you shall bring it back to him.

5 If you see the ass of one who hates you lying under its burden, you shall refrain from leaving him with it, you shall help him to lift it up."

^m Gk: Heb obscure

all legal decisions. No penalties are specified for transgressions: the concern is not with specific cases but with an all-pervasive sense of justice. In the ancient Oriental world Israel alone was able, despite periodic delinquency such as that attacked by the prophets, to make this sense of justice and honor an ineradicable part of its ethos. Vss. 1-3, 6-9, are in the apodictic form of the Ten Words (20:1-17); vss. 4-5, in the specific form of case law, give two examples of moral character and social responsibility.

23:1. This verse is a repetition and illustration of the commandment against false witness (20:16). Connivance in matters of judicial testimony was subject to the severest penalties (Deut. 19:16-21).

2. A man must have the courage of his convictions. Instead of to do evil one can read "in evil things" (LXX). Instead of in a suit one can read "with a multitude." The will of the mob must not be confused with truth and justice, even at the risk of personal safety (cf. Ps. 15).

3. That a court would be partial to a poor man has seemed so unlikely to interpreters that they have often sought to emend the text of this verse in order to get the supposedly real meaning. Indeed, if, as seems probable, vs. 3 was originally followed by vs. 6 it becomes virtually impossible to make sense of vs. 3 as it stands. Lev. 19:15 is Beer's justification (Exodus, p. 118) for adding "nor to a great man" after to a poor man. Whether upward or downward, whether because of sentimentality or ambition, justice must not be forsaken. God is no respecter of persons (Deut. 10:17; Acts 10:34). The emendation suggested by Quell (Kittel, Biblia Hebraica, ad loc.) eliminates the poor man from this verse entirely (גרל וגרל). "A great man is probably the true reading" (McNeile, Exodus, p. 138). Since vs. 6, however, deals with the poor man, Beer's real concern is still served, and at the cost of a much more minor change.

4-5. Moral and social responsibility transcends personal enmities. Fulfilling it may heal the enmities. The primary concern is with responsibility (Deut. 22:1-4). It demands that a domestic animal found wandering about at large be returned to its owner by his "brother." In the second example the maintenance of the principle of responsibility is more difficult to achieve in view of the presence of the enemy with the donkey "stretched out" under his burden. Yet he must offer help. In both cases the enmity proceeds from the person to be aided; "one who is hostile to you" and who hates you. These examples belie the assertion of Matt. 5:43.

that you do not retail lies, nor talk maliciously and help an evil cause along. Do not be so anxious to agree with the majority, but decide honestly yourself. Be impartial both to the small and great, and see that you take particular pains to be fair to our poor. Keep far away from any shady dealings, have no part in destroying the innocent or in helping to acquit the wicked—and have nothing to do with bribes.

Nothing could be more up to date today. It was and is an appeal to the conscience of the reader and is as pertinent to behavior in a law court as in a casual conversation. Be a nonconductor of evil. Be an individual, not merely a 6 Thou shalt not wrest the judgment of thy poor in his cause.

7 Keep thee far from a false matter; and the innocent and righteous slay thou not: for I will not justify the wicked.

8 ¶ And thou shalt take no gift: for the gift blindeth the wise, and perverteth the words of the righteous.

9 ¶ Also thou shalt not oppress a stranger: for ye know the heart of a stranger, seeing ye were strangers in the land of Egypt.

10 And six years thou shalt sow thy land, and shalt gather in the fruits thereof:

6 "You shall not pervert the justice due to your poor in his suit. 7 Keep far from a false charge, and do not slay the innocent and righteous, for I will not acquit the wicked. 8 And you shall take no bribe, for a bribe blinds the officials, and subverts the cause of those who are in the right.

9 "You shall not oppress a stranger; you know the heart of a stranger, for you were strangers in the land of Egypt.

10 "For six years you shall sow your

6. In the suit of your poor you must not pervert the justice, i.e., the decision or the basis on which it is given (mishpāt). The poor also belong to the community of Israel; they are your poor.

7. The false charge must be interpreted as a complaint without basis filed by a plaintiff against innocent persons. Such false charges must be treated for what they are. Every responsible person must keep far from them, lest he become an accomplice in the slaying of the innocent and righteous that might follow if such a false charge were established in court. The Hebrew text underlying for I will not acquit the wicked is in doubt. The LXX reads, "and you must not justify the wicked for a bribe," but this seems too much to anticipate vs. 8.

8. The subtle psychological effect of becoming indebted to one partner in a suit through the acceptance of "favors" is well made by the metaphor about the blinding of the officials (Deut. 16:19).

9. This verse repeats the rule about the gēr in 22:21. It sums up the rule by adding that Israelites know the outlook of resident aliens.

(4) A CHURCH CALENDAR (23:10-19)

The second half of the social code (21:1-23:19), beginning at 22:18, probably ended originally at 23:3, for that verse has all the earmarks of the conclusion of an audience. However, the concluding provisions of what was probably the original code and those now found in vss. 13-19 belong together in our interpretation of Exodus since they are all concerned with the same subject, the manner and times of cultic observances incumbent upon all Israelites.

(a) THE SABBATHS (23:10-13)

10-11. The fallow year is not described as a sabbath here. Nor is it given a specifically religious meaning. Later its humanitarian function, stressed here, is not lost, but it is primarily a sabbath signifying Yahweh's possession of the land (Lev. 25:2-7). The custom member of a mob (respectable or not). Be fair. Avoid the suburbs of the evil place.

10-13. Mercy for Man and Beast.—This whole chapter is filled with kindness and thoughtfulness for others, love for one's enemies (vss. 4-5), showing that Matt. 5:42 was reflecting one school of ancient doctrine, and thought even for the beasts, showing that the famous final words of the book of Jonah were not unique and reminding one of the inclusion of the cattle in the historic scene at Bethlehem.¹ Regulations which elsewhere are founded upon religious motives (see Lev. 25:4) are here based on humanitarian considerations only; even the sabbath (vs. 12) exists for the benefit of the ox and the ass (see Num. 22:28 ff.; Prov. 12:10; I Cor. 9:9). The poetry and pity that lie deep in the human heart conceived the idea of leaving the ground

¹ See Kipling's poem, "Eddi, the Priest of St. Wilfrid."

11 But the seventh year thou shalt let it rest and lie still; that the poor of thy people may eat: and what they leave the beasts of the field shall eat. In like manner thou shalt deal with thy vineyard, and with thy oliveyard.

12 Six days thou shalt do thy work, and on the seventh day thou shalt rest: that thine ox and thine ass may rest, and the son of thy handmaid, and the stranger, may be refreshed.

13 And in all things that I have said unto you be circumspect: and make no mention of the name of other gods, neither let it be heard out of thy mouth.

land and gather in its yield; 11 but the seventh year you shall let it rest and lie fallow, that the poor of your people may eat; and what they leave the wild beasts may eat. You shall do likewise with your vineyard, and with your olive orchard.

12 "Six days you shall do your work, but on the seventh day you shall rest; that your ox and your ass may have rest, and the son of your bondmaid, and the alien, may be refreshed. 13 Take heed to all that I have said to you; and make no mention of the names of other gods, nor let such be heard out of your mouth.

of letting land lie fallow is quite common among primitive people. The original function of the custom is probably religious, to appease the spiritual powers controlling the land or to give them opportunity to restore its fertility. That this was once true as well of the custom in Israel is rendered more likely by the fact that the laws about not cutting the corners (Lev. 23:22) or gathering the gleanings (Lev. 19:9-10), later also given a humanitarian explanation, are founded upon the conviction that the spirits ruling the soil must share in its products. It is not stated here that all land was to rest during the same year, but the analogy of vs. 12 implies it. In Lev. 25:2-7 this point is explicitly made. It is seriously doubtful that this was originally the case. We have little evidence to show that the fallow year was strictly observed by many until the era of the Maccabees; Lev. 26:34-35 seems to imply that it was not. So does Jer. 17:4, if it is a reference to the custom. In later times the law of the release of creditors and of slaves at the end of six years was combined with that of the fallow year, thus preserving it for an economy no longer purely agricultural (Deut. 15:2; Neh. 10:31).

12. With its humanitarian motivation, this form of the sabbath law corresponds most closely to Deut. 5:14-15. But in the complete absence of any Israelite religious interpretation it is like 34:21. This does not compel us to conclude that the sabbath had no religious meaning when this provision was written. The brevity of the provisions in the latter half of the code (cf. 22:29) leads one to assume that the code offers no innovations but serves as a reminder of what is well known.

13. This verse was once the conclusion to a series of admonitions, possibly from 21:1. The use of the name of another god is forbidden. The word mention rests on a Hebrew word meaning "cause to remember"; it has a cultic significance, i.e., in worship other gods may not be "remembered" by having their name mentioned. Nor is their name to pass one's lips in private. The law corresponds to 20:3 (cf. Exeg. on 22:20 and 34:14).

fallow on every seventh year; partly because it reminded the tenants that they were only borrowers from the real owner of the land who was Yahweh (Lev. 25:23); partly so that the poor and the beasts of the field should not be exterminated by the march of civilization, but like Ruth (2:15-16) should have a little left on which they could glean; partly, as it turned out, for the good of the land itself. So the modern science of agriculture was born!

It was a lovely idea, but the fact that Deuteronomy omits it suggests that it did not prove to be workable (Lev. 26:34-35), as it certainly would not be feasible in the case of vineyards and olive yards (which were added in vs. 11 by someone who was a scribe rather than a farmer). But the phrase in Leviticus "Then shall the land enjoy her sabbaths" is a fair picture of surcease from profit for momentary benefit to all, to the animals, to the poor, even to the character of the owner. And yet today the similar idea that industry should be operated not 14 ¶ Three times thou shalt keep a feast unto me in the year.

15 Thou shalt keep the feast of unleavened bread: (thou shalt eat unleavened bread seven days, as I commanded thee, in the time appointed of the month Abib; for in it thou camest out from Egypt: and none shall appear before me empty:)

16 And the feast of harvest, the firstfruits of thy labors, which thou hast sown in the field: and the feast of ingathering, which is in the end of the year, when thou hast gathered in thy labors out of the field.

17 Three times in the year all thy males shall appear before the Lord God.

18 Thou shalt not offer the blood of my sacrifice with leavened bread; neither shall the fat of my sacrifice remain until the morning.

19 The first of the firstfruits of thy land thou shalt bring into the house of the LORD thy God. Thou shalt not seethe a kid in his mother's milk.

14 "Three times in the year you shall keep a feast to me. 15 You shall keep the feast of unleavened bread; as I commanded you, you shall eat unleavened bread for seven days at the appointed time in the month of Abib, for in it you came out of Egypt. None shall appear before me empty-handed. 16 You shall keep the feast of harvest, of the first fruits of your labor, of what you sow in the field. You shall keep the feast of ingathering at the end of the year, when you gather in from the field the fruit of your labor. 17 Three times in the year shall all your males appear before the Lord God.

18 "You shall not offer the blood of my sacrifice with leavened bread, or let the fat of my feast remain until the morning.

19 "The first of the first fruits of your ground you shall bring into the house of the LORD your God.

"You shall not boil a kid in its mother's milk.

(b) THE GREAT FESTIVALS (23:14-19)

14. The three festivals of obligation are mentioned immediately after the sabbaths. To keep a feast and appear before the Lord are the same in this context (vs. 18; 34:25; cf. Deut. 16:16). These observances were originally held at many centers and only later centralized in Jerusalem, which is the place to be chosen of which Deuteronomy speaks. In I Sam. 1:3, 21 there is apparently an annual pilgrimage to Shiloh.

15. The first festival is designated in this E section as unleavened bread. In 34:24 [J] it is known as a Passover. This lends support to the view that it was known by the former title in the north and the latter in the south. The ancient festival has already been reoriented to celebrate Israel's deliverance. The admonition not to delay bringing the first fruits (22:29) is matched by the provision that none shall appear before me empty-handed. The terseness characteristic of so many laws from 22:18-23:19 is also exhibited in the summary of the festivals (cf. 12:15-28). The provisions serve as reminders rather than as instruction.

16. The feast of Weeks (34:22; Deut. 16:10, 16) is here called the feast of harvest (lit., "of the cutting") of crops sown in the field. The feast of Tabernacles is also known by its more primitive name: the feast of ingathering (cf. 34:22). In both instances the ancient titles bespeak the pre-Israelite history of the feasts.

18-19. These final rubrics are virtually identical with 34:24-25. The fat of my feast is that part of a sacrifice which was burned on the altar. It is doubtful that at the Passover anything except the blood was offered to Yahweh. In any case, the real concern is that the eating of the Passover must be completed before morning (34:25). This E section, however, knows the festival only as Unleavened Bread. In the Ugaritic texts (Birth of the Gods, 1. 14) we learn that at a sacrificial meal a kid was cooked in milk and a solely for the benefit of the owners, but for the good of all, owners, workers, and the public, is slightly heretical if taken seriously. ("I am not running my business for the purpose of providing a quart of milk per diem for every Hottentot," is still apt to be the reaction to any suggestion of public service rather than private profit.)

14-19. See Lev. 23; Deut. 16; for vs. 19, see Expos., pp. 850-51.

20 ¶ Behold, I send an Angel before thee, to keep thee in the way, and to bring thee into the place which I have prepared.

21 Beware of him, and obey his voice, provoke him not; for he will not pardon your transgressions: for my name is in him.

22 But if thou shalt indeed obey his voice, and do all that I speak; then I will be an enemy unto thine enemies, and an adversary unto thine adversaries.

23 For mine Angel shall go before thee, and bring thee in unto the Amorites, and the Hittites, and the Perizzites, and the Canaanites, the Hivites, and the Jebusites; and I will cut them off.

24 Thou shalt not bow down to their gods, nor serve them, nor do after their works: but thou shalt utterly overthrow them, and quite break down their images.

25 And ye shall serve the LORD your God, and he shall bless thy bread, and thy water; and I will take sickness away from the midst of thee.

20 "Behold, I send an angel before you, to guard you on the way and to bring you to the place which I have prepared. 21 Give heed to him and hearken to his voice, do not rebel against him, for he will not pardon your transgression; for my name is in him.

22 "But if you hearken attentively to his voice and do all that I say, then I will be an enemy to your enemies and an adversary to your adversaries.

23 "When my angel goes before you, and brings you in to the Amorites, and the Hittites, and the Perizzites, and the Canaanites, the Hivites, and the Jebusites, and I blot them out, 24 you shall not bow down to their gods, nor serve them, nor do according to their works, but you shall utterly overthrow them and break their pillars in pieces. 25 You shall serve the LORD your God, and Iⁿ will bless your bread and your water; and I will take sickness away ⁿ Gk Vg. Heb he lamb in butter. The categorical rejection of such a practice in Israel, which develops as a primary principle in Jewish dietary laws, shows that while certain Canaanite practices were assimilated in order to serve the Israelite revelation, others were rejected outright. This is a striking illustration of the integrity maintained in the midst of a most comprehensive process of cultural assimilation.

c) A FAREWELL EXHORTATION (23:20-33)

This final section in the laws of the covenant (20:21-23:33) consists not of laws but of promises, warnings, and reminders. It is a farewell speech, spoken apparently as Israel set out from Sinai for Canaan. Though a conclusion to the laws of the covenant, it does not admonish the people to keep the code. Its burden is that Israel must obey the angel (vs. 22) who will lead it into its inheritance. And it warns against making covenants with the Canaanites or their gods, to whom the code makes no direct reference. Much of the discourse has a Deuteronomic cast.

20. The angel is God's presence in the midst of his people, to guide them in the wilderness (cf. 14:19). The cloud (13:21) and the ark (Num. 10:33) were also symbols of his presence. Canaan is the place . . . prepared (cf. 15:17).

21. The presence is personified so that God speaks of him in the third person. He has the full power and authority of God. The angel is God in one of his capacities or functions.

22. Israel's safety lies in obedience to the divine will. Israel's enemies were often the means of God's judgment. It was the prophets' role to explicate this.

23-25. The list of Canaanite peoples, the orders to uproot them, to avoid their gods, and to destroy the pillars are typically Deuteronomic (Deut. 7:1-5). Israelites had

20-33. The Accompanying Angel.—This passage forms the concluding paragraph of the book of the covenant, but originally was directed from Sinai to the children of Israel as they set out toward the Promised Land. Yahweh remains in Sinai but his word to Israel is, I send an Angel before thee. The implication of the whole passage is that if Israel had obeyed the law of God and walked in his ways, its people would have been the happiest on earth. God had looked after everything for them. It is a sober truth for us all. God has anticipated and looked after 26 ¶ There shall nothing cast their young, nor be barren, in thy land: the number of thy days I will fulfil.

27 I will send my fear before thee, and will destroy all the people to whom thou shalt come; and I will make all thine enemies turn their backs unto thee.

28 And I will send hornets before thee, which shall drive out the Hivite, the Canaanite, and the Hittite, from before thee.

29 I will not drive them out from before thee in one year; lest the land become desolate, and the beast of the field multiply against thee.

30 By little and little I will drive them out from before thee, until thou be increased, and inherit the land.

31 And I will set thy bounds from the Red sea even unto the sea of the Philistines, and from the desert unto the river: for I will deliver the inhabitants of the land into your hand; and thou shalt drive them out before thee.

from the midst of you. 26 None shall cast her young or be barren in your land; I will fulfill the number of your days. 27 I will send my terror before you, and will throw into confusion all the people against whom you shall come, and I will make all your enemies turn their backs to you. 28 And I will send hornets before you, which shall drive out Hivite, Canaanite, and Hittite from before you. 29 I will not drive them out from before you in one year, lest the land become desolate and the wild beasts multiply against you. 30 Little by little I will drive them out from before you, until you are increased and possess the land. 31 And I will set your bounds from the Red Sea to the sea of the Philistines, and from the wilderness to the Eu-phra'tes; for I will deliver the inhabitants of the land into your hand, and you shall drive them out probably taken over the pillar as a religious symbol from the Canaanites (II Kings 17:10; 18:4). Its abolition was a feature of the reforms of Hezekiah and Josiah and is prescribed in Deut. 12:3. The sickness that Yahweh would take away is also a Deuteronomistic touch (Exod. 15:24b-26; Deut. 7:15; 28:27, 60).

26. In most of the O.T., and especially in the Deuteronomistic writings, fruitfulness, prosperity, and long life were the hallmarks of the divine favor. The earth is "good" and its gifts desirable. There is little otherworldliness. The meaning of history is to be sought in historical fulfillment. Living is the reward of life.

27-29. The terror of the nations at the approach of God and his people (15:14-18) is here repeated. The Hebrew word for hornets (cf. Josh. 24:12; Deut. 7:20) is a collective noun. The writer draws a picture of some swarm of insects pursuing the fleeing natives of Canaan. His power in Canaan will be as great as it was in Egypt (cf. 8:20-32). A picture such as this could be drawn only when the harsh and difficult conditions of Israel's early centuries in Canaan had become a vague memory, romanticized because of a later prosperity.

30. Something of the actual ruggedness is still recalled in the qualification of this verse. The possession of the land had been a piecemeal process. It was not complete until the era of David. The reasons for this delay were seriously pondered (Judg. 2:21-23; 3:1-6).

31-33. These boundaries represent in idealized form the extent of Solomon's empire (I Kings 4:21). Actually, even in Solomon's time, Israel did not hold Philistia or any site on the Mediterranean, the sea of the Philistines.

everything for us. It depends entirely upon us whether we walk in the way of peace or stray into the byways of distress. I will be an enemy unto thine enemies, and an adversary unto thine adversaries. . . . God . . . shall bless thy bread, and thy water. . . . By little and little I will drive [thine enemies] out from before thee, until thou . . . inherit the land. Well, what more could you ask? God will take care of you. But there are conditions—you must co-operate with God; "you must obey the voice of my Angel"; "you must not worship the gods of the enemy"; "you shall not let the gods of the heathen ensnare you, nor make any covenant 32 Thou shalt make no covenant with them, nor with their gods.

33 They shall not dwell in thy land, lest they make thee sin against me: for if thou serve their gods, it will surely be a snare unto thee.

24 And he said unto Moses, Come up unto the LORD, thou, and Aaron, Nadab, and Abihu, and seventy of the elders of Israel; and worship ye afar off.

2 And Moses alone shall come near the LORD: but they shall not come nigh; neither shall the people go up with him.

before you. 32 You shall make no covenant with them or with their gods. 33 They shall not dwell in your land, lest they make you sin against me; for if you serve their gods, it will surely be a snare to you."

24 And he said to Moses, "Come up to the LORD, you and Aaron, Nadab, and Abihu, and seventy of the elders of Israel, and worship afar off. 2 Moses alone shall come near to the LORD; but the others shall not come near, and the people shall not come up with him."

5. THE RATIFICATION OF THE COVENANT (24:1-18)

The establishment of the covenant, which began with a theophany (ch. 19) and the conditions for which are laid down in the laws (chs. 20-23), is completed by the ceremonies of ratification here described. There are two ceremonies. The present text seeks to leave the impression that they were performed in succession. Before the first ceremony, while Moses is still on the mount, the directions for the second rite are given (vss. 1-2). Then follows the first rite in which Moses consecrates the people (vss. 3-8). The second ceremony, the sacred meal of Yahweh with the nobles of Israel (vss. 9-11), follows. Thereafter Moses and Joshua approach the Presence to receive the stone tablets of the law (vss. 12-14). The elders, with Aaron and Hur, remain behind to judge the people. The stage is set for ch. 32. It seems probable, however, that these two ceremonies represent two different ways of describing the ratification which have an origin independent of each other. Vss. 3-8 continue 23:32 and belong to the E source. Vss. 1-2, 9-11, 12-14 have traditionally been assigned to J (cf. McNeile, Exodus, pp. xxxi-xxxii; S. R. Driver, The Book of Exodus [Cambridge: Cambridge University Press; "The Cambridge Bible"], pp. 251-52). Otto Eissfeldt adheres to this by assigning them to his "L," i.e., to the lay strand he finds in J (Einleitung in das Alte Testament [Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1934], pp. 214-16).

24:1. And he said to Moses: After speaking to others Yahweh turns to Moses. We must perhaps return to the scene in 20:21. God has just addressed the people; now he speaks to Moses. Beer, who ascribes all of the core of ch. 24 to E¹ (i.e., to a strand in E that continues to use the name "Elohim" after 3:15), emends to the LORD to read, "to me" (Exodus, p. 126), since God himself is speaking. The inclusion of the two older sons of Aaron, Nadab and Abihu, has survived their repudiation in the later tradition (Lev. 10:1-3). The elders represent the people. In both ceremonies the covenant is sealed with the people as a whole.

2. Moses alone, or with Joshua (vs. 13), must approach the Presence (33:7-11). As in the temple, later, the gradations in holiness are carefully observed. The LXX reads "God" instead of "LORD" (cf. ibid.).

with them, but be wholly a sincere servant of God." The testimony of all saints in all ages answers, "Yes, this is literally true."

24:1-11. In the Presence of the Infinite.—Sapphire stone was lapis lazuli, a deep blue stone filled with starlike, goldlike particles of iron pyrites, a lovely symbol of the heavens, "this brave o'erhanging firmament, this majestical roof fretted with golden fire."² It was much prized by the ancients, one of the seven stones placed on the breast of Babylonian kings. Most museums show Egyptian articles of luxury made from it, though with the original polish lost they look duller there than they did to the first proud owners.

² Shakespeare, Hamlet, Act II, scene 2.

Confronted with the words they saw God, the Greek translators of the Hebrew felt the contradiction with other passages concerning the fatal effects of looking upon God, and so they

3 ¶ And Moses came and told the people all the words of the LORD, and all the judgments: and all the people answered with one voice, and said, All the words which the LORD hath said will we do.

4 And Moses wrote all the words of the LORD, and rose up early in the morning, and builded an altar under the hill, and twelve pillars, according to the twelve tribes of Israel.

5 And he sent young men of the children of Israel, which offered burnt offerings, and sacrificed peace offerings of oxen unto the LORD.

6 And Moses took half of the blood, and put it in basins; and half of the blood he sprinkled on the altar.

7 And he took the book of the covenant, and read in the audience of the people: and they said, All that the LORD hath said will we do, and be obedient.

8 And Moses took the blood, and sprinkled it on the people, and said, Behold the

3 Moses came and told the people all the words of the LORD and all the ordinances; and all the people answered with one voice, and said, "All the words which the LORD has spoken we will do." 4 And Moses wrote all the words of the LORD. And he rose early in the morning, and built an altar at the foot of the mountain, and twelve pillars, according to the twelve tribes of Israel. 5 And he sent young men of the people of Israel, who offered burnt offerings and sacrificed peace offerings of oxen to the LORD. 6 And Moses took half of the blood and put it in basins, and half of the blood he threw against the altar. 7 Then he took the book of the covenant, and read it in the hearing of the people; and they said, "All that the LORD has spoken we will do, and we will be obedient." 8 And Moses took the blood and threw it upon the people, and said, "Behold the blood of the covenant which the LORD has

3. Here begins the account of the first ceremony. The words of the LORD must mean the contents of the laws. The phrase all the ordinances is probably a redactor's insertion since it is not included in the people's statement of acceptance.

4. Here and in vs. 7 Moses is said to have written the laws in a book and read them out to the people, though in vs. 3 the people had already accepted them following an oral report. Vss. 4 and 7 probably constitute a D addition (cf. Deut. 31:9, 24, 26) that forms a doublet to vs. 3. The altar Moses prepares is to be thought of as conforming to the type commanded in 20:24. The twelve pillars are here to be understood as symbolizing the people by clans rather than deity. Since pillars were also used to represent deity, and since this practice was outlawed in the era of Deuteronomy, the LXX renders this word as simply "stones."

5. The burnt offerings are to praise God; the peace offerings celebrate fellowship with him (cf. 20:24).

6-7. Moses serves as priest. The altar against which he threw the blood stands as a testimony to the act of consecration; it represents the active presence of God in the relationship. By the sprinkling of the same blood upon the people and upon the altar, God and people are united in a sacred fellowship. The sacred meal (vss. 9-11) was also a common way of establishing such fellowship. It was probably the oldest form, and the sprinkling of the blood symbolizes what was once no doubt an actual drinking of it. The people's acceptance repeats their words in vs. 3.

8. The blood of the covenant means the blood by means of which the covenant is established. In later tradition the book too was said to have been sprinkled by the blood translated, "They were seen in the place of God"; but the original text is explicit, and all of vs. 11b is a true suggestion of the sacrament of Holy Communion: The vision of God (the word for "see" is a poetical one in the Hebrew) is united to practical living. The poets saw God standing above the starry universe, and in so doing were conscious of how small is man's body, yet how great is his mind that can embrace all this dazzling immensity, and soaring above it, picture to itself the Creator and Director of it all, nay, see him also, and talk with him as friend with friend. But the highest flight of poetic imagination was in the possiblood of the covenant, which the LORD hath made with you concerning all these words.

9 ¶ Then went up Moses, and Aaron, Nadab, and Abihu, and seventy of the elders of Israel;

10 And they saw the God of Israel: and there was under his feet as it were a paved work of a sapphire stone, and as it were the body of heaven in his clearness.

11 And upon the nobles of the children of Israel he laid not his hand: also they saw God, and did eat and drink.

12 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Come up to me into the mount, and be there: and I will give thee tables of stone, and a law, and commandments which I have written; that thou mayest teach them.

13 And Moses rose up, and his minister Joshua; and Moses went up into the mount of God.

14 And he said unto the elders, Tarry ye here for us, until we come again unto you: and, behold, Aaron and Hur are with you: if any man have any matters to do, let him come unto them.

made with you in accordance with all these words."

9 Then Moses and Aaron, Nadab, and Abi'hu, and seventy of the elders of Israel went up, ¹⁰ and they saw the God of Israel; and there was under his feet as it were a pavement of sapphire stone, like the very heaven for clearness. ¹¹ And he did not lay his hand on the chief men of the people of Israel; they beheld God, and ate and drank.

12 The LORD said to Moses, "Come up to me on the mountain, and wait there; and I will give you the tables of stone, with the law and the commandment, which I have written for their instruction." ¹³ So Moses rose with his servant Joshua, and Moses went up into the mountain of God. ¹⁴ And he said to the elders, "Tarry here for us, until we come to you again; and, behold, Aaron and Hur are with you; whoever has a cause, let him go to them."

(Heb. 9:20). Blood becomes the metaphor for the covenant in the N.T. (Matt. 26:28; I Cor. 11:25). There the blood symbolizes especially the grace of God in man's redemption, a meaning borne by the Exodus in the O.T.

9-11. The sacred meal, provided for in vss. 1-2, now takes place. They saw the God of Israel. They did not behold a figure face to face (33:20). They looked up at the sky, a pavement of sapphire stone, on which the feet of God were supposed to rest. God was thought of as throned above the waters that were over the canopy of heaven (Ps. 29:10). The Presence is so real that it is as if "the heavens were opened" (Ezek. 1:1). The transfiguration scene in the N.T. is indebted to this account (cf. Matt. 17:5). In this sacred Presence the nobles were safe. Israel is holy by virtue of the covenant; it is not God, but it shares his life.

12-14. Moses is asked to come up to God, to enter what in the temple was known as the holy of holies. He was summoned to receive the tables of stone (cf. 31:18b) on bility that man and his ways were directed and cared for by the same great power that laid the cornerstone of the earth, "when the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy," that in him (to talk sacramentally) we may eat and drink and have our being.

12-18. Alone with God.—So Moses was, for forty days and forty nights. Forty was a symbolic number used generally for a period of time. Its use indicates many days or many years (see 16:35; Judg. 3:11; 5:31; 8:28; 13:1; I Sam. 4:18; I Kings 19:8; Amos 2:10; Matt. 4:2; Acts 1:3). The leader disappears for a considerable time, during which God speaks to him and he talks with God. Leaders in our day lack such an opportunity. The president of the United States, the prime minister of Great Britain, are provided with presidential yachts or country homes by the nation; but business follows them by radio and special wire and messenger. Clergymen are supposed to have their mornings free for prayer and study, but they must fight friends, busybodies, and their own lazy selves, if their retreat is to be kept inviolate.

Moses went up the mount to meet and talk with God. Is there anything which corresponds with this in modern life? The sentimental pietist claims that he has had an identical experience, but the fruits in thought and life which he

15 And Moses went up into the mount, and a cloud covered the mount.

16 And the glory of the LORD abode upon mount Sinai, and the cloud covered it six days: and the seventh day he called unto Moses out of the midst of the cloud.

17 And the sight of the glory of the LORD was like devouring fire on the top of the mount in the eyes of the children of Israel.

18 And Moses went into the midst of the cloud, and gat him up into the mount: and Moses was in the mount forty days and forty nights.

15 Then Moses went up on the mountain, and the cloud covered the mountain.

16 The glory of the LORD settled on Mount Sinai, and the cloud covered it six days; and on the seventh day he called to Moses out of the midst of the cloud. 17 Now the appearance of the glory of the LORD was like a devouring fire on the top of the mountain in the sight of the people of Israel. 18 And Moses entered the cloud, and went up on the mountain. And Moses was on the mountain forty days and forty nights.

which the laws were written. These are also known as "the two tables of stone" (34:1, 4 [J]), "the tables of the covenant" (Deut. 9:9, 11, 15), and "the tables of testimony" (31:18a; 32:15; 34:29 [P]). That God had written the law meant that it expressed his character. The law in written form gave it permanence and made it serviceable as a cultural instrument; it was written for their instruction. The terms law and instruction rest on the same Hebrew root which means "to throw," "to shoot," or by derivation, "to point"; hence, from pointing, "to direct," "to instruct." Law is tôrāh, instruction. It is not primarily a precept in legal form; it is revelation in living cultural forms.

Joshua is Moses' servant or chaplain (33:11; Josh. 1:1). They leave the scene together. The LXX says that "they" went up into the mountain. The Hebrew text, perhaps for the sake of harmony with 32:15, offers no clue as to where Joshua went. Of all those left in charge only Aaron is held responsible when Moses returns (ch. 32).

15-18. This note, by a priestly editor, is really an introduction to the account of the deliverance of the cultic ordinances to Moses (chs. 25-31). For P these, and all laws, were given at Sinai. But they are not set in the framework of the covenant or considered as the conditions of it. For P the covenant with Abraham (Gen. 17) was the real covenant; further, laws were not part of the covenant, which constituted a sacramental relationship; they were only signs of it.

brings down from the mount too often do not justify his claim in the minds of his fellows. The scientist brings back from his vigil the new discovery and invention to be appraised by the world for what it is worth. The poet and composer and artist have proofs to offer of the authenticity of their "forty days." Moses brought down the tables of the law, tangible proof that something great had happened on the mount. Nor can it be otherwise with the religious man. He must justify his faith by thoughts and life which, tested by the standards of ordinary human beings, prove to be great. Mere pious words are not enough; mere assertions that God told him this are empty air. The proof is in the texture of what he is and thinks and does. The accents of the Holy Ghost are heard in truth that, like cold water to the thirsty soul, commends itself to the best in all men, in kindness and courtesy of life.

Many an honest religious man has asked himself at times, "Have I ever heard God's voice or spoken to him and been sure of his answer?" Perhaps for most men the beginning of such an experience is in thanksgiving. After fulfilling some difficult assignment, one's whole being goes up to God in a simple acknowledgment, "Unless you had helped me, I could not have come through with it even as well as I have; a thousand thanks"; and at such a moment there is such a conscious relation as of father to beloved son, an interchange of affection, that the hand held out seems to be grasped and held for a moment. We are sure that someone greater than ourselves has been operating in and through us. Such was Moses' experience. "We have got this people so far upon their way; they are safely out of Egypt; we have the first beginnings of an organization started; we have escaped several pitfalls. I never could have done it by myself. To thee, Yahweh, all my gratitude and loyalty!"³

³ See the last words of Moses in Connelly, The Green Pastures, Part II, scene 4.

25 And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

2 Speak unto the children of Israel, that they bring me an offering: of every man that giveth it willingly with his heart ye shall take my offering.

3 And this is the offering which ye shall take of them; gold, and silver, and brass,

4 And blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine linen, and goats' hair,

25 The LORD said to Moses, 2 "Speak to the people of Israel, that they take for me an offering; from every man whose heart makes him willing you shall receive the offering for me. 3 And this is the offering which you shall receive from them: gold, silver, and bronze, 4 blue and purple and scarlet stuff and fine twined linen, goats'

B. THE P ORDINANCES FOR THE CULTUS (25:1-31:18)

See Intro., pp. 844-46.

I. THE OFFERING (25:1-9)

25:1. Moses had entered the cloud (24:18) to receive "the tables of stone" (24:12) inscribed with the law. But now the priestly writer summons him to make an oral communication to the people. Kurt Galling feels that the version PA did not contain the prescription for an offering, so that vs. 8-9 followed immediately upon vs. 1 (Beer, Exodus, p. 130).

2. Moses is to ask the people for an offering that will make construction of the tabernacle possible. The Hebrew word terûmâh means "heave offering" (Num. 18:8, 19; Neh. 12:44; 13:5). The phrase whose heart makes him willing shows that the offering here prescribed can also be equated with a freewill offering (cf. 35:29). Both offerings were expressions of personal loyalty and gratitude over and beyond the levies required of all. When Jehoash renovated the temple (II Kings 12:4-15) freewill offerings and the poll tax provided the means (cf. Exod. 30:13). In Ezekiel's plan for the restoration of the temple, the temple area itself is spoken of as a terûmâh (Ezek. 45:1; 48:8).

3. The items proper to the offering are listed. The metals were to be offered from stocks available (35:22, 24). There is no mention of iron, a metal which seems to have had a function only in tools of war and agriculture.

4. The woven supplies are made by the women (35:23, 25). Both available supplies and new manufacture can be included in the offering. The woolen fabrics are classified by the colors of the costly dyes used in their manufacture. The blue or violet and the purple were dyes obtained from two different species of shellfish found in the Mediterranean. The Hebrew "worm of scarlet" still indicates the origin of the third color. Women also spun the fine twined linen and the goats' hair (35:25-26).

Hard study, deep thought, a quiet mind receptive to the subtle suggestions that flow therefrom, an opening of the heart to a universal spirit, a purging of oneself from narrow meanness—these are the elements of prayer as Moses experienced it on the mount, when he felt a great spirit flow in upon his own and found his own ideas surrounded by and at last lost in the wider thoughts of God. God's revelation of himself is always progressive, growing. Moses' case as he came in contact with the religions of his day is like our own, "The keynote of idolatry is contentment with the prevalent gods."⁴

25:1-9. The Sanctuary as Man's Response.—Thus the first church was built: the dwelling or tabernacle, the tent of meeting, the holy place, the most holy place. It was God's house, a sublime reproduction of an ordinary dwelling house: with its laver in front of the entrance, as in every Eastern home, where hands and feet were washed for the visitor (Gen. 18:4; 43:24; John 13:5, foreshadowing Tit. 3:5); with its lampstand (Zech. 4:2); with a table for food; with its inner rooms not open to every visitor. It was a tent, a symbol of transitoriness, pointing onward to some more substantial dwelling for God in the Temple in Jerusalem, and at long last to the perfect tabernacle of Heb. 9:11; Rev. 21:3. It was a tent of witness containing the law of God. The writers of the description of the tabernacle were systematizers of tradition and they carried back into the twelfth century the

⁴ A. N. Whitehead, Adventures of Ideas (New York: The Macmillan Co., 1933), p. 12.

5 And rams' skins dyed red, and badgers' skins, and shittim wood,

6 Oil for the light, spices for anointing oil, and for sweet incense,

7 Onyx stones, and stones to be set in the ephod, and in the breastplate.

8 And let them make me a sanctuary; that I may dwell among them.

9 According to all that I show thee, after the pattern of the tabernacle, and the pattern of all the instruments thereof, even so shall ye make it.

hair, 5 tanned rams' skins, goatskins, acacia wood, 6 oil for the lamps, spices for the anointing oil and for the fragrant incense, 7 onyx stones, and stones for setting, for the ephod and for the breastpiece. 8 And let them make me a sanctuary, that I may dwell in their midst. 9 According to all that I show you concerning the pattern of the tabernacle, and of all its furniture, so you shall make it.

5. Skins and wood also constitute part of the offering. The rams' skins were "reddened," probably as a result of the tanning process. The other leather cited was also used to make sandals (Ezek. 16:10). This and the fact that the Hebrew word may be related to an Arabic word for "dolphin" has led some to conclude that it or some other marine mammal was the source of the second leather mentioned (cf. Amer. Trans. and ASV). Acacia wood had a reputation for durability (cf. LXX ad loc.) which modern study confirms. There is a desert species of acacia (acacia seyal), still extant, as well as an Egyptian species (acacia nilotica). It seems probable that the ark was made from the former (Deut. 10:3; cf. Isa. 41:19; cf. also G. E. Post, "Shittah Tree," in A Dictionary of the Bible, ed. James Hastings [New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1902], IV, 507).

6. This verse is omitted in the LXX. The oil for the lamps is olive oil (27:20-21). So is the oil mixed with spices for anointing (30:22-33). The spices for the incense are detailed in 30:34-38. The oil and spices were part of the offering brought by the leaders (35:27-28). Gifts of this type were often made to the temple by friendly foreigners of rank in the late Jewish era.

7. The translation of onyx stones for "stones of the shōham" (M.T.) rests mainly on the LXX. The true nature of the stones is uncertain. Other stones reportedly used in the breastplate (28:15-30) are not specified in any of the summaries (cf. 35:9, 27), though clearly referred to.

8-9. Sanctuary here means the whole sacred area, the tabernacle and the court surrounding it. It is the place set apart for God's abode. The dwelling is to be constructed according to the pattern God shows Moses on the mount (cf. vs. 40; 26:30; 27:8). There is revealed in the statement both a concern for preciseness about the appointment for the cultus and, as in the case of the law, the conviction that the cultic arrangements were ordained by God. The pattern is explicitly cited only for the ark, the lampstand, the table, the tent, and the altar. The temple was also thought to be the expression of a divine pattern (I Chr. 28:19). The notion of a heavenly model for temples, cult objects, and laws is universal in the ancient Near East.

ecclesiastical atmosphere of the fifth or fourth. The writers felt that the ideals of their own time must have been ideals for Israel ever since they began to worship Yahweh. The untrained nomads around Sinai, just escaped from brick-making and slavery, could not have had the skill in carpentry work, weaving, embroidery, forging and casting of metals, toolmaking and the many other crafts necessary for such an elaborate structure. Not even with all the loot from the Egyptians could they have had enough of precious materials for such splendor, nor could they have moved it about with them on their wanderings. As it stands, it is the enlarged vision which Moses saw upon the mount of what would be worthy for the home of Yahweh. As the Creator made the earth for man to dwell in, so man must make a dwelling for the Creator. The symbolic number seven runs all through the narrative. As the work of creation took seven days, as the building of Solomon's Temple took seven years (I Kings 6:38), so the work on the tabernacle took seven months (compare the following passages: 19:1 ff.; 24:18;

10 ¶ And they shall make an ark of shittim wood: two cubits and a half shall be the length thereof, and a cubit and a half the breadth thereof, and a cubit and a half the height thereof.

11 And thou shalt overlay it with pure gold, within and without shalt thou overlay

10 "They shall make an ark of acacia wood; two cubits and a half shall be its length, a cubit and a half its breadth, and a cubit and a half its height. 11 And you shall overlay it with pure gold, within and

2. THE ARK (25:10-22)

In the promulgation of the appointments for the cultus the ark comes first; in the account of the execution it is constructed after the tabernacle is ready. The mention of Bezalel by name in 37:1, however, suggests the possibility that the original order of the latter was changed (cf. 36:1). In the pre-Deuteronomiac period the boxlike object (II Kings 12:9-10) was known as "the ark of Yahweh" (I Sam. 4:6) or "the ark of God" (I Sam. 3:3). In Deuteronomy it is called "the ark of the covenant of Yahweh" (Deut. 10:8; 31:9, 25-26). Here in P it is the ark of the testimony (vs. 22). The ark in early Israel was associated with the shrine at Shiloh (I Sam. 3-6) just as the tent of meeting was, perhaps, at Gibeon (II Chr. 1:3, 13). There is no good reason to doubt that this ark existed in Israel from the time of the nomadic era under Moses (cf. Num. 10:33-36). This is true whether it was taken over from the priest Jethro, from the shrine at Kadesh (cf. ch. 18), or whether it was built by Moses himself (Deut. 10:1-3). Modern research has shown that objects that serve as a palladium still exist among Arab tribes (Alois Musil, The Manners and Customs of the Rwala Bedouins [New York: American Geographical Society, 1928]; also, Julian Morgenstern, The Ark, the Ephod, and the "Tent of Meeting" [Cincinnati: Union of American Hebrew Congregations, 1945], pp. 5-55). The role of the ark in early Israel seems to have been very similar to these Arabic parallels: it led Israel on pilgrimage and in battle. The significance of the ark waned with the gradual fading of the nomadic spirit and role, and it may have ceased to exist even before the Exile (Jer. 3:16). In any event it did not survive the first temple. When P's account was written no ark existed any more. There may once have been an earlier description of the ark which was suppressed by P editors in favor of their own (33:1-6, 7-11; Deut. 10:1-5). We now know little about the appearance of the actual ark. It was perhaps a rather rude wooden box, open at the top, with few decorative parts.

10. Instead of reading they shall make it is better to read "thou shalt make" (so LXX and Samar.; cf. vs. 13, 17, 18, 23). The cubit was an Egyptian as well as an Israelite unit of length. A cubit is approximately eighteen inches. Thus the measurements of the ark were forty-five by twenty-seven by twenty-seven inches.

11. The molding of gold round about is often interpreted as a rim at the top into which perhaps the cover fitted (cf. ASV ad loc.). But it is also possible that the "wreath"

34:28; 40:17). The narrative in 39:1-31 is in seven paragraphs, punctuated by the formula "As Yahweh commanded Moses"; so also in 40:17-32. The editor has arranged the whole series of commands into seven sections (25:1 ff.), each beginning with the words "And Yahweh spake unto Moses saying." Some of the sections are in turn divided into seven parts, each beginning with the words "And thou shalt make." So later scribes tried to symbolize and systematize the pattern that was shown to Moses on the mount.

Whether or not the tabernacle was ever built in all its magnificence, it does seem clear that there was in the time of Moses an ark and a tent with table, lampstand, and altar, dwelling in which there was a mysterious spiritual presence, who made his home with the people and received their offerings. It was built by the gifts of the people and with the skills that they possessed—a labor of love.

10-16. The Fashioning of the Ark.—The ark was the sacred and mysterious medium by which the guiding and protecting presence of Yahweh abode among his people. It was originally a box (see Exeg.). Ornaments and contents apparently were added later. The earliest descriptions do not mention them. Before it were placed relics and remembrances of God's mercies, the pot of manna, Aaron's rod that it, and shalt make upon it a crown of gold round about.

12 And thou shalt cast four rings of gold for it, and put them in the four corners thereof; and two rings shall be in the one side of it, and two rings in the other side of it.

13 And thou shalt make staves of shittim wood, and overlay them with gold.

14 And thou shalt put the staves into the rings by the sides of the ark, that the ark may be borne with them.

15 The staves shall be in the rings of the ark: they shall not be taken from it.

16 And thou shalt put into the ark the testimony which I shall give thee.

17 And thou shalt make a mercy seat of pure gold: two cubits and a half shall be the length thereof, and a cubit and a half the breadth thereof.

without shall you overlay it, and you shall make upon it a molding of gold round about. 12 And you shall cast four rings of gold for it and put them on its four feet, two rings on the one side of it, and two rings on the other side of it. 13 You shall make poles of acacia wood, and overlay them with gold. 14 And you shall put the poles into the rings on the sides of the ark, to carry the ark by them. 15 The poles shall remain in the rings of the ark; they shall not be taken from it. 16 And you shall put into the ark the testimony which I shall give you. 17 Then you shall make a mercy seat^o of pure gold; two cubits and a half shall be its length, and a cubit and a half its breadth.

^o Or cover or "crown" was a ropelike cable or band meant to go around the box at its middle, or lower down.

12. The word for feet (RSV) is not the one commonly used. It means a recurrent point or motion and may be translated corners (KJV; cf. I Kings 7:30). If the rings were attached to the corner post of the box they need not have been at the bottom.

13-15. The ark was mobile by virtue of the poles. When the original ark was brought to its final location in the holy of holies in the temple its poles were visible from the holy place (I Kings 8:8). As a symbol of the mobility of Yahweh, they were never to be removed from the rings.

16. Vss. 16, 21b give evidence of the composite character of this account. Deut. 10:2 also relates that the tables of the law were placed inside the ark; but in P the idea produces a change in its name. Instead of "the ark of the covenant," it becomes the ark of the testimony (vs. 22). Many scholars, among them Hugo Gressmann, have maintained that the original ark at first contained images of a deity or fetishes, and that these were later exchanged for, or rather interpreted as, the tablets of the laws. Others deny this, partly on the ground that there was no need for anything to be in the ark (Eichrodt, Theologie des A.T., I, 44-45).

17. The kappôreth or mercy seat was a cover (RSV mg.) for the box. Its name, however, denotes the function it had in the cultus of P. It was the place where by blood the sins of Israel were "covered," i.e., atoned for (Lev. 16:2, 13-15). It was the most sacred object in the most holy place; it was the very throne of Yahweh.

blossomed. Later editors placed them inside the ark. Later tradition also places inside the ark the two tablets of the law. If, as is suggested by a study of the text, the original box was empty and unornamented, it is a nice example of early tendencies in the history of religion, tendencies to move from simplicity, silence, emptiness, and awe to ritual, splendor, and dogmatism, from the Quaker meeting to the High Mass at St. Peter's, from Ps. 23 to the Nicene Creed. Those who seek for fundamentals in religion must be careful not to move too many of their revered relics from "before Yahweh" (16:33) and place them in the ark itself. A nineteenth-century traveler tells of finding in the hill country of British India a native who said he was a "Southern Baptist," which seems perilously near placing the American Civil War in the ark.

17-22. The Mercy Seat and the Cherubim.—The voice of God came from between the cherubs who stood upon the cover of the ark. The presence of God is just above the earth, not touching it. The sonorous Hebrew plural

18 And thou shalt make two cherubim of gold, of beaten work shalt thou make them, in the two ends of the mercy seat.

19 And make one cherub on the one end, and the other cherub on the other end: even of the mercy seat shall ye make the cherubim on the two ends thereof.

20 And the cherubim shall stretch forth their wings on high, covering the mercy seat with their wings, and their faces shall look one to another; toward the mercy seat shall the faces of the cherubim be.

21 And thou shalt put the mercy seat above upon the ark; and in the ark thou shalt put the testimony that I shall give thee.

22 And there I will meet with thee, and I will commune with thee from above the mercy seat, from between the two cherubim which are upon the ark of the testimony, of all things which I will give thee in commandment unto the children of Israel.

23 ¶ Thou shalt also make a table of shittim wood: two cubits shall be the length thereof, and a cubit the breadth thereof, and a cubit and a half the height thereof.

18 And you shall make two cherubim of gold; of hammered work shall you make them, on the two ends of the mercy seat.

19 Make one cherub on the one end, and one cherub on the other end; of one piece with the mercy seat shall you make the cherubim on its two ends. 20 The cherubim shall spread out their wings above, overshadowing the mercy seat with their wings, their faces one to another; toward the mercy seat shall the faces of the cherubim be. 21 And you shall put the mercy seat on the top of the ark; and in the ark you shall put the testimony that I shall give you. 22 There I will meet with you, and from above the mercy seat, from between the two cherubim that are upon the ark of the testimony, I will speak with you of all that I will give you in commandment for the people of Israel.

23 "And you shall make a table of acacia wood; two cubits shall be its length, a cubit its breadth, and a cubit and a half its height.

18-21a. Cherubim were guardians of sacred places of the tombs of the great (Gen. 3:24; Ezek. 28:14; for illustrations see Volz, Biblischen Altertümer, p. 12). They are also the servants of God (Ezek. 10:18; Ps. 18:10 [Hebrew 11]). As such they help to determine the representation of angels. They are usually given a human face and the body of an animal. Here in P the cherubim are attached to the mercy seat and their function, as in the temple, is to overshadow the divine Presence.

22. There will I meet with you: With these words P transfers a role that originally belonged to the tent of meeting (33:7-11) to the ark. For him the ark is no longer only a symbol of the constant presence of God with his people, in a rather gross form, as was true of the ancient ark. It is at the same time the symbol of God's nearness and of his transcendence. P's ark combines the functions of the ancient ark and the tent.

3. THE TABLE (25:23-30)

23. Instead of a table of acacia wood the LXX prescribes "a table of pure gold." The table is for the bread of the Presence (vs. 30). The most ancient reference to this "holy bread" (I Sam. 21:6) does not mention a table. As in the case of the ark, the cherubim has been of much value in hymnology. In the countries around, many such winged figures—griffins, bulls, etc.—were found in sacred shrines (see reference to Volz in Exeg.). They combined the ideas of strength and swiftness. According to the old rabbis, the name of the one was Righteousness and of the other Mercy; but some ancient interpreters have said that while usually their faces were half turned away from each other, yet when peace and righteousness ruled among the people they turned toward each other, and bending forward kissed each other (Ps. 85:10).

23-40. The Table and the Candlestick.—The altar table seems to be mentioned in I Kings 6:20; Ezek. 41:22. Josephus says the legs were square at the top but that the feet were carved.⁵ The "table bread for the presence" (I Sam. 21:5) was also found among the Babylonians, ⁵ Antiquities III. 6. 6.

24 And thou shalt overlay it with pure gold, and make thereto a crown of gold round about.

25 And thou shalt make unto it a border of a handbreadth round about, and thou shalt make a golden crown to the border thereof round about.

26 And thou shalt make for it four rings of gold, and put the rings in the four corners that are on the four feet thereof.

27 Over against the border shall the rings be for places of the staves to bear the table.

28 And thou shalt make the staves of shittim wood, and overlay them with gold, that the table may be borne with them.

29 And thou shalt make the dishes thereof, and spoons thereof, and covers thereof, and bowls thereof, to cover withal: of pure gold shalt thou make them.

30 And thou shalt set upon the table showbread before me always.

24 You shall overlay it with pure gold, and make a molding of gold around it. 25 And you shall make around it a frame a handbreadth wide, and a molding of gold around the frame. 26 And you shall make for it four rings of gold, and fasten the rings to the four corners at its four legs. 27 Close to the frame the rings shall lie, as holders for the poles to carry the table. 28 You shall make the poles of acacia wood, and overlay them with gold, and the table shall be carried with these. 29 And you shall make its plates and dishes for incense, and its flagons and bowls with which to pour libations; of pure gold you shall make them. 30 And you shall set the bread of the Presence on the table before me always.

original must have been a simple wooden object. It was destroyed in the burning of the temple (II Kings 25:9). The story that Jeremiah preserved it in a cave (II Macc. 2:5) must be considered legendary. But, unlike the ark, the table was replaced in the second temple. However, we cannot be certain that the same table served it and the temple of Herod (cf. I Macc. 1:22; 4:49). In any case, later accounts stress the gold ornamentation rather than the wooden structure of the table (vss. 24, 26, 29 [PB]; vs. 23 [LXX]; Josephus Antiquities VIII. 3. 7). Only here is it explicitly stated that it was made of wood. The appearance of the table on the Titus Arch in Rome (Volz, Biblischen Altertümer, pp. 52-53) suggests that the sides of the table were open.

24-25. Sometimes the table was called "the pure table" (Lev. 24:6) because of the pure gold with which it was overlaid. The word for molding is the same as in vs. 11. Galling (Beer, Exodus, p. 133) thinks that it designates the same item as the word for frame, i.e., vs. 25a is PB's way of saying the same thing PA has said in vs 24b. Later an editor, failing to recognize the identity, added another molding on the frame (vs. 25b)! On the Titus Arch parts of the frame are visible. They are attached to the legs midway between the table top and the clawlike "feet." It seems possible to conclude that there was only one molding—on the frame, i.e., vs. 25b is an explanatory elaboration of vs. 24b.

26-27. The rings are apparently nearer the end of the legs in vs. 26 than in vs. 27; separate sources seem indicated.

29. The vessels are symbolized by a single bowl on the table in the Titus Arch (cf. Num. 4:7). This was for the offering of wine which accompanied the bread.

30. The bread of the Presence is also called "holy bread" (I Sam. 21:4, 6), and "continual bread" (I Chr. 9:32; Neh. 10:33; etc.). It is so designated in the N.T. (Matt. 12:4;

where it was likewise called bread of the Presence. It was a reminder that man's food is the gift of God and that it should be used in God's service. The term showbread is formed on the same analogy as Luther's Schaubrot. The idea that God himself would eat of the bread lingered on from primitive times (Jer. 7:18; Isa. 65:11). In one village church in England may be seen a common loaf of bread prominently displayed every Sunday (paid for by an ancient legacy), to be given at the close of the service to the poorest person present—a good example of the complete humanizing of a faith born in superstition and perpetuated by ritual symbolism; a loaf first for the god to eat, then as a symbol of man's dependence and duty, and 31 ¶ And thou shalt make a candlestick of pure gold: of beaten work shall the candlestick be made: his shaft, and his branches, his bowls, his knops, and his flowers, shall be of the same.

32 And six branches shall come out of the sides of it; three branches of the candlestick out of the one side, and three branches of the candlestick out of the other side:

33 Three bowls made like unto almonds, with a knop and a flower in one branch; and three bowls made like almonds in the other branch, with a knop and a flower: so in the six branches that come out of the candlestick.

34 And in the candlestick shall be four bowls made like unto almonds, with their knops and their flowers.

35 And there shall be a knop under two branches of the same, and a knop under two branches of the same, and a knop under two branches of the same, according to the six branches that proceed out of the candlestick.

36 Their knops and their branches shall be of the same: all of it shall be one beaten work of pure gold.

31 "And you shall make a lampstand of pure gold. The base and the shaft of the lampstand shall be made of hammered work; its cups, its capitals, and its flowers shall be of one piece with it; 32 and there shall be six branches going out of its sides, three branches of the lampstand out of one side of it and three branches of the lampstand out of the other side of it; 33 three cups made like almonds, each with capital and flower, on one branch, and three cups made like almonds, each with capital and flower, on the other branch — so for the six branches going out of the lampstand; 34 and on the lampstand itself four cups made like almonds, with their capitals and flowers, 35 and a capital of one piece with it under each pair of the six branches going out from the lampstand. 36 Their capitals and their branches shall be of one piece with it, the whole of it one piece of hammered work of Mark 2:26). The bread was an "offering" to Yahweh in which he was recognized as the source of the earth's fruitfulness and of Israel's sustenance. The table stood in the holy place, to the right of the entrance into the holy of holies.

4. THE LAMPSTAND (25:31-40)

P's description of the lampstand (menôrāh) corresponds to the object of the post-exilic period. We do not know whether the lamp (nēr) at Shiloh (I Sam. 3:3) was on a lampstand. In Solomon's temple there were ten lampstands (I Kings 7:48-50). Kurt Galling (Biblisches Reallexikon [Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1937; "Handbuch zum Alten Testament"], p. 349) is of the view that the seven-branched lampstand did not originate until the fifth century. The oil-burning lamps (vs. 37) are apparently of the terra-cotta variety. These lamps (nērōth) shall be set up on the lampstand. They are separable from it. Each lamp would consist of a single bowl for oil, but might support more than one wick. W. F. Albright reports that at Tell Beit Mirsim he found terra-cotta lamps that were pinched in seven places to hold seven wicks (The Archaeology of Palestine and the Bible [New York: Fleming H. Revell, 1932], pp. 161-62). Those found all dated from 900 B.C. or before. Vss. 31b, 33-36, 38-39 (PB) introduce extensive ornamentation.

The function of the lamps was to illuminate the holy place. Natural light could come in only by the eastern entrance. They also had an aesthetic function. But increasingly the lampstand served as a religious symbol. It was the sign of God's presence in the midst of his people (Zech. 4:1-14). For the lamps to go out was a sign of impending finally in full understanding of the divine words, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least, . . . ye have done it unto me" (Matt. 25:40). But this loaf soon again became a symbol in its turn as time marches on, a symbol of social justice.

33. Almond Blossoms.—The Hebrew word means "awaken." As the almond blossom is the first to appear in the spring, it has the same happy connotation as "May" in English poetry, "Mayflower" or "trailing arbutus" in the eastern United States (cf. Jer. 1:11-12).

37 And thou shalt make the seven lamps thereof: and they shall light the lamps thereof, that they may give light over against it.

38 And the tongs thereof, and the snuffdishes thereof, shall be of pure gold.

39 Of a talent of pure gold shall he make it, with all these vessels.

40 And look that thou make them after their pattern, which was showed thee in the mount.

26 Moreover thou shalt make the tabernacle with ten curtains of fine twined linen, and blue, and purple, and scarlet: with cherubim of cunning work shalt thou make them.

pure gold. 37 And you shall make the seven lamps for it; and the lamps shall be set up so as to give light upon the space in front of it. 38 Its snuffers and their trays shall be of pure gold. 39 Of a talent of pure gold shall it be made, with all these utensils. 40 And see that you make them after the pattern for them, which is being shown you on the mountain.

26 "Moreover you shall make the tabernacle with ten curtains of fine twined linen and blue and purple and scarlet stuff; with cherubim skilfully worked shall you disaster (II Esdras 10:22). It may be inferred from 27:21; 30:8 that the lamps were lit only at night. Later tradition affirmed that the lamps burned perpetually (cf. Josephus Antiquities III. 8. 3). The religious meaning of the ancient Menorah is perpetuated for Christians in the sanctuary lamp. In the tabernacle the lampstand stood opposite the bread of the Presence, to the left as one looked toward the most holy place.

38-39. In Isa. 6:6 the snuffers are tongs with which coals are picked up off the altar. These are perhaps tweezerlike instruments for adjusting the wicks. The trays are receptacles for holding them. A talent of gold weighed about 108 pounds.

40. The recurrence of the formula of vs. 9 shows that we are at the conclusion of a section. Ark, table, and lampstand constitute a unit.

5. THE TABERNACLE (26:1-37)

The tabernacle here presented never actually existed. It is a product of the priestly imagination, an ideal structure. Two historical objects helped to give shape to the imaginary structure which was to illustrate a new theological conviction. First, it drew on the tent of meeting of the ancient tradition. Galling (Beer, Exodus, pp. 134-35) shows persuasively that the oldest strand (PA in vss. 7-14) drew the tabernacle in the shape of a tent. The later development of the document (PB) added two items: (a) vss. 15-30, which provide a rectangular wooden structure to take the place of the original tent shape; (b) vss. 1-6, which provide the goat's hair tent cover of the tabernacle with a "lining" decorated after the patterns on the walls of Solomon's temple (cf. vs. 1; I Kings 6:29). Thus, on the basis of the history of the text as analyzed by von Rad and Galling, we must allow a chronological priority of influence to the tent in giving rise to this ideal structure.

As Gerhard von Rad has shown ("Zelt und Lade," Neue kirchliche Zeitschrift, XLII [1931], 476-98), P's theological concern was to work out a synthesis between tent and ark.

26:1-37. Blue, Purple, and Scarlet.—Symbolism and beauty in the sanctuary are one. Everything that can be done to inspire reverence should help the congregation in every church. Here emphasis is placed on color,⁶ on skilled craftsmanship, on precious stones and metals, on lovely robes, on light, and trumpet tones.

⁶ See Mary Webb's essay "The Beauty of Colour," Poems and the Spring of Joy (New York: E. P. Dutton & Co., 1929), pp. 202-11.

Dignity, form, seemliness rule throughout the making of the sanctuary and the performance of its services. It is probably not edifying for the modern man to study too curiously all the details of the following chapters, but it is most important to note how carefully and lovingly everything was planned. Nothing was left to chance. Every act was symbolic. The church ought to be, like the tabernacle, the most lovely, well-cared for, clean building in the community.

2 The length of one curtain shall be eight and twenty cubits, and the breadth of one curtain four cubits: and every one of the curtains shall have one measure.

3 The five curtains shall be coupled together one to another; and other five curtains shall be coupled one to another.

4 And thou shalt make loops of blue upon the edge of the one curtain from the selvedge in the coupling; and likewise shalt thou make in the uttermost edge of another curtain, in the coupling of the second.

5 Fifty loops shalt thou make in the one curtain, and fifty loops shalt thou make in the edge of the curtain that is in the coupling of the second; that the loops may take hold one of another.

6 And thou shalt make fifty taches of gold, and couple the curtains together with the taches: and it shall be one tabernacle.

make them. 2 The length of each curtain shall be twenty-eight cubits, and the breadth of each curtain four cubits; all the curtains shall have one measure. 3 Five curtains shall be coupled to one another; and the other five curtains shall be coupled to one another. 4 And you shall make loops of blue on the edge of the outmost curtain in the first set; and likewise you shall make loops on the edge of the outmost curtain in the second set. 5 Fifty loops you shall make on the one curtain, and fifty loops you shall make on the edge of the curtain that is in the second set; the loops shall be opposite one another. 6 And you shall make fifty clasps of gold, and couple the curtains one to the other with the clasps, that the tabernacle may be one whole.

He wanted to re-establish the idea of the transcendence of God in relation to his people symbolized by the ancient tent and its cloud. Creatively and theologically, "P stands in the Tent of Meeting tradition" (ibid., p. 495). He was moving away from that which the ark at Shiloh or the holy of holies in Solomon's temple had stood for. This interpretation of the tabernacle does away with Wellhausen's view that the tabernacle represented an attempt to project the temple and its service back into the era of nomadism (cf. Intro., pp. 844-46).

a) THE TENT (26:1-14)

26:1. You shall make the tabernacle with ten curtains: The number refers to the panels, each four cubits wide, which are to be brought together to form an "inner lining" for the tent over the tabernacle (vs. 7). The word with rests on no Hebrew form. It is used in an attempt to translate what is seen as an accusative of specification (cf. Amer. Trans., "out of").

The cherubim which provided the decorative motifs were apparently to be woven into the fabric. They were to be "the work of the skillful designers" in weaving (cf. Amer. Trans., "work of artists"). In contrast, the decorative work on the screen is spoken of as "the work of the embroiderer" (vs. 36).

2. This inner lining of the tentlike cover of the tabernacle is two cubits shorter than the goats' hair cover over it. Also there are only ten panels, while the latter has eleven. When placed over the frame, it would have lacked a cubit from reaching to the ground on either side (cf. illustration in Hastings, Dictionary of the Bible, IV, 661). It is not hinted how the ten extra cubits of width, which hung over at the rear of the frame when the completed whole was put over the thirty-cubit-long frame, were to be arranged. This lack of provisions for arranging the tent on the frame not only reminds us that the frame is probably a later intrusion but also that the whole is an imaginary structure.

3-6. How the five separate panels in each half were to be coupled to one another we are not told. The two halves were to be laid alongside of each other, the ends even. Then, where they met, along the side of each, fifty loops of blue, opposite one another, were to be provided. Golden clasps put through these loops were to hold the two halves

7 ¶ And thou shalt make curtains of goats' hair to be a covering upon the tabernacle: eleven curtains shalt thou make.

8 The length of one curtain shall be thirty cubits, and the breadth of one curtain four cubits: and the eleven curtains shall be all of one measure.

9 And thou shalt couple five curtains by themselves, and six curtains by themselves, and shalt double the sixth curtain in the forefront of the tabernacle.

10 And thou shalt make fifty loops on the edge of the one curtain that is outmost in the coupling, and fifty loops in the edge of the curtain which coupleth the second.

11 And thou shalt make fifty taches of brass, and put the taches into the loops, and couple the tent together, that it may be one.

12 And the remnant that remaineth of the curtains of the tent, the half curtain that remaineth, shall hang over the back side of the tabernacle.

13 And a cubit on the one side, and a cubit on the other side of that which remaineth in the length of the curtains of 7 "You shall also make curtains of goats' hair for a tent over the tabernacle; eleven curtains shall you make. 8 The length of each curtain shall be thirty cubits, and the breadth of each curtain four cubits; the eleven curtains shall have the same measure. 9 And you shall couple five curtains by themselves, and six curtains by themselves, and the sixth curtain you shall double over at the front of the tent. 10 And you shall make fifty loops on the edge of the curtain that is outmost in one set, and fifty loops on the edge of the curtain which is outmost in the second set.

11 "And you shall make fifty clasps of bronze, and put the clasps into the loops, and couple the tent together that it may be one whole. 12 And the part that remains of the curtains of the tent, the half curtain that remains, shall hang over the back of the tabernacle. 13 And the cubit on the one side, and the cubit on the other side, of together. The central seam of the complete cover was directly over the veil which separated the holy from the most holy place.

7. As suggested above, vss. 7-14 may constitute the original core of the P account on the tabernacle. The curtains of goats' hair suggest standard Bedouin tent material. But it is stated that the curtains are for a tent over the tabernacle. The phrase is curious and suggests two pictures. Contrary to vss. 1, 15 the expression over the tabernacle suggests that the rectangular frame was, in essence, the tabernacle. Further 'ôhel normally refers to a structure in its own right, not to a roof over another structure. It seems possible that originally the title "tent of meeting" stood here and that it was later changed to the present "double" form (cf. Beer, Exodus, p. 134).

8. There were to be eleven curtains or panels. Their length was to be thirty cubits, two cubits longer than the inner cover described in vss. 1-6. When hung over the frame specified in vss. 15-30 the ends would just reach the ground. However, it seems possible that this is an original account that envisioned the tabernacle as a tent with sloping sides, tent ropes and pins, and the poles to hold it up. Such a tent would have been forty cubits long (cf. ibid., Fig. 1, p. 135). It would have been open at both ends. Galling has suggested that any description of it that may once have been a part of P would have been suppressed in favor of the frame of vss. 15-30 (ibid.). An echo of it may have survived in vs. 13.

9. The sixth panel of the foremost half was to double over at the front of the tent (cf. 28:16). In vs. 12, probably a gloss, a contradictory explanation is offered (cf. McNeile, Exodus, p. lxxvii). The manner of coupling the separate panels is not specified (cf. vs. 3).

10-11. The two halves are to be joined as in vss. 3-6. But the loops are probably of the goats' hair of which the curtains are made, and there are fifty clasps of bronze. These would be immediately over those in vs. 6 and, like them, over the veil.

13. This verse seems to presuppose the "lining" of vss. 1-6, which is twenty-eight cubits long. There is a surplus of two cubits in the length of the curtains.

the tent, it shall hang over the sides of the tabernacle, on this side and on that side, to cover it.

14 And thou shalt make a covering for the tent of rams' skins dyed red, and a covering above of badgers' skins.

15 ¶ And thou shalt make boards for the tabernacle of shittim wood standing up.

16 Ten cubits shall be the length of a board, and a cubit and a half shall be the breadth of one board.

17 Two tenons shall there be in one board, set in order one against another: thus shalt thou make for all the boards of the tabernacle.

what remains in the length of the curtains of the tent shall hang over the sides of the tabernacle, on this side and that side, to cover it. 14 And you shall make for the tent a covering of tanned rams' skins and goat-skins.

15 "And you shall make upright frames for the tabernacle of acacia wood. 16 Ten cubits shall be the length of a frame, and a cubit and a half the breadth of each frame. 17 There shall be two tenons in each frame, for fitting together; so shall you do for all

14. Tanned rams' skins and goatskins (cf. 25:5) were to cover the black goats' hair tent. They may have been as a protection against the weather.

b) THE WOODEN STRUCTURE (26:15-30)

The wooden structure represents an attempt to make the tent-tabernacle conform to the Solomonic temple. The floor space measures thirty by ten cubits. Solomon's temple measured sixty by twenty. The most holy place is, as in the temple, a cube: ten by ten by ten, compared to thirty by twenty by twenty. But since the structure must be accommodated to the tent, the similarities end here. It consists of only two sides and a west end. Moreover, the walls are ten cubits high all around. The fact that the walls of the holy place in Solomon's temple were higher than in the most holy place is ignored. Finally, nothing is said about a roof or about any sort of central support such as is normally provided for a tent by tent poles (cf. vs. 8).

15-16. Gallings' title for the wooden structure is Brettergerüst ("board frame"; Beer, Exodus, p. 136; note especially Fig. 3, p. 135). The Hebrew term qerāshim was traditionally translated as boards (KJV, ASV). Gallings continues to translate it so. Outside of this context it occurs only in Ezek. 27:6, where it is usually translated "deck," though the meaning is not clear. A. R. S. Kennedy (cf. "Tabernacle," Hastings, Dictionary of the Bible, IV, 659-61) reinterpreted the whole context of the word in the plan of the tabernacle and so arrived at the meaning frames. He proceeded on the dubious assumption that, in the writers of P, the tent cover and the wooden structure had been fully integrated. Specifically, Kennedy was convinced that the writers would have wanted the beautiful inner cover (vss. 1-6) with its colored cherubim visible along the walls as well as overhead. Therefore he decided that the wooden walls consisted of open frames through which the cover was visible. Also, Kennedy did not think that the writers would have portrayed a structure whose materials would have been so very difficult to transport in the desert. He perhaps overestimated the concerns of P with such practical matters. There is ample evidence of a lack of harmonization between tent and frame to warrant the possibility that the finely woven cherubim would have been invisible behind solid walls. The Kennedy hypothesis seeks to impute to the writers a concern for architectural niceties and interior decoration they do not seem to have had. Nevertheless, on simple linguistic grounds and for the sake of giving meaning to the text, his theory is still the best solution proposed (cf. Exeg. on vss. 17-19).

17-19. Each frame (or board) shall have two "hands" or tenons (cf. I Kings 7:32-33, "axletrees"; also vss. 35-36, "stays"). Kennedy identified the two uprights of 18 And thou shalt make the boards for the tabernacle, twenty boards on the south side southward.

19 And thou shalt make forty sockets of silver under the twenty boards; two sockets under one board for his two tenons, and two sockets under another board for his two tenons.

20 And for the second side of the tabernacle on the north side there shall be twenty boards,

21 And their forty sockets of silver; two sockets under one board, and two sockets under another board.

22 And for the sides of the tabernacle westward thou shalt make six boards.

the frames of the tabernacle. 18 You shall make the frames for the tabernacle: twenty frames for the south side; 19 and forty bases of silver you shall make under the twenty frames, two bases under one frame for its two tenons, and two bases under another frame for its two tenons; 20 and for the second side of the tabernacle, on the north side twenty frames, 21 and their forty bases of silver, two bases under one frame, and two bases under another frame; 22 and for the rear of the tabernacle westward you his "frames" as the tenons. Since the tenons are to be joined, each to its opposite, he provided each frame with "cross rings" (Amer. Trans.). Traditionally the view has been that the two tenons were pins at the bottom of the boards, to be fitted into the socket of the silver bases (vss. 18-19). Galling, however, thinks of the two tenons as pins along the side of each board. The mates for these pins are thought of as mortising locks along the side edge of the board immediately opposite (cf. Beer, Exodus, Fig. 3, p. 135). The fitting together consists, then, of mortising the boards by inserting the pegs in their corresponding locks. Galling's interpretation is full of difficulties. Notably, in vs. 19 we are told that the two bases under each frame are for its two tenons. These must be the two tenons referred to in vs. 17. But if they are to be fitted into the base sockets, they must be at the bottom of the frame, not along its sides. Without warrant Galling interprets the tenons in vs. 19 as another pair than those in vs. 17, calling them "base pins" (Standzapfen). Nor, indeed, is there any real evidence for locks in the boards. The Hebrew text says that "they shall be joined, each to the one corresponding to it" (lit., "a woman to her sister"; cf. vs. 3). The antecedent of "they" is tenons, not boards as the KJV almost implies.

Galling saw this, but since he thought of the frames as boards he invented another pair of tenons for the base in vs. 19. It is not the boards that are to be fitted together or set in order one against another; nor are pins or tenons to be fitted into locks along the sides of the boards. Tenons are to be joined together. This, says Kennedy, is done by means of "cross rungs" (in late and modern Hebrew the word for rung is actually derived from the root involved in fitting together). The brilliance and proof of Kennedy's solution are here seen in the satisfactory interpretation it gives of vs. 17 and in the manner in which it reconciles vs. 17 with vs. 19.

18. The total length of the side walls would be thirty cubits. We do not know how deep the frames were. It is generally felt that if the frames were open outside measurements are indicated.

20-21. The bases or pedestals of silver are each to be provided with one socket.

22. The length of six frames would total nine cubits. It has often been suggested that this indicates that the depth of the frames was approximately nine inches. The six frames would then just fit between the north and south walls at the west end, giving an outside measurement of ten cubits (cf. McNeile, Exodus, p. lxxvi; also Kennedy, "Tabernacle," in Hastings, op. cit., IV, 659-61). This interpretation automatically removes the two additional frames of vs. 23 from the wall proper.

23 And two boards shalt thou make for the corners of the tabernacle in the two sides.

24 And they shall be coupled together beneath, and they shall be coupled together above the head of it unto one ring; thus shall it be for them both; they shall be for the two corners.

25 And they shall be eight boards, and their sockets of silver, sixteen sockets; two sockets under one board, and two sockets under another board.

26 ¶ And thou shalt make bars of shittim wood; five for the boards of the one side of the tabernacle, 27 And five bars for the boards of the other side of the tabernacle, and five bars for the boards of the side of the tabernacle, for the two sides westward.

28 And the middle bar in the midst of the boards shall reach from end to end.

29 And thou shalt overlay the boards with gold, and make their rings of gold for places for the bars; and thou shalt overlay the bars with gold.

30 And thou shalt rear up the tabernacle according to the fashion thereof which was showed thee in the mount.

shall make six frames. 23 And you shall make two frames for corners of the tabernacle in the rear; 24 they shall be separate beneath, but joined at the top, at the first ring; thus shall it be with both of them; they shall form the two corners. 25 And there shall be eight frames, with their bases of silver, sixteen bases; two bases under one frame, and two bases under another frame.

26 "And you shall make bars of acacia wood, 27 five for the frames of the one side of the tabernacle, and five bars for the frames of the other side of the tabernacle, and five bars for the frames of the side of the tabernacle at the rear westward. 28 The middle bar, halfway up the frames, shall pass through from end to end. 29 You shall overlay the frames with gold, and shall make their rings of gold for holders for the bars; and you shall overlay the bars with gold. 30 And you shall erect the tabernacle according to the plan for it which has been shown you on the mountain.

23-24. In these verses the RSV owes much to the interpretation of the wooden structure provided by Kennedy. The two additional frames do not stand in the wall as properly a part of it, but are treated as corners . . . in the rear. The Hebrew term means "corner structure" (Ezek. 41:22). It does not seem impossible that it could signify buttress (Neh. 3:19-20). Once it is granted that the frames are buttresses it must be decided how they were placed. The RSV decides that they shall be separate beneath, but joined at the top. This emphasizes the sloping angle of the pieces. The word translated separate really means "twins"; here, "double." The word given as joined means "complete," "integrated." But in the Samar. and the LXX, instead of this word, there is a second occurrence of "double" (cf. ASV; Amer. Trans.). The sloping buttress shall be double or separate from the wall all the way up to the ring near the top of the wall (cf. vs. 28). Thus shall it be with both of them, i.e., with both corner pieces.

Galling (Beer, Exodus, p. 135) still holds to the view that the two additional frames were a part of the end wall itself, "corner pieces."

26-27. Wooden or iron bars were used especially to shut the gates of walled towns from within (cf. Deut. 3:5). Here they are to be run through loops or rings of gold (!) attached perhaps to the outside of the frames.

28. It seems that there were three bands of bars, but that only the middle band was to run the whole length of a wall, from end to end. On the side this would have meant a bar forty-five feet long!

30. This formula is an attempt to duplicate the one in 25:9, 40. It differs in that instead of speaking of the "pattern . . . on the mountain," it speaks of the plan (mishpāt). It does not really come at the conclusion of the instructions. Hence, it seems that the late writer who inserted that section into the P account (PB) must also have provided the formula.

31 ¶ And thou shalt make a veil of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen of cunning work: with cherubim shall it be made.

32 And thou shalt hang it upon four pillars of shittim wood overlaid with gold: their hooks shall be of gold, upon the four sockets of silver.

33 ¶ And thou shalt hang up the veil under the taches, that thou mayest bring in thither within the veil the ark of the testimony: and the veil shall divide unto you between the holy place and the most holy.

34 And thou shalt put the mercy seat upon the ark of the testimony in the most holy place.

35 And thou shalt set the table without the veil, and the candlestick over against the table on the side of the tabernacle toward the south: and thou shalt put the table on the north side.

36 And thou shalt make a hanging for the door of the tent, of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen, wrought with needlework.

37 And thou shalt make for the hanging five pillars of shittim wood, and overlay them with gold, and their hooks shall be of gold: and thou shalt cast five sockets of brass for them.

31 "And you shall make a veil of blue and purple and scarlet stuff and fine twined linen; in skilled work shall it be made, with cherubim; 32 and you shall hang it upon four pillars of acacia overlaid with gold, with hooks of gold, upon four bases of silver. 33 And you shall hang the veil from the clasps, and bring the ark of the testimony in thither within the veil; and the veil shall separate for you the holy place from the most holy. 34 You shall put the mercy seat upon the ark of the testimony in the most holy place. 35 And you shall set the table outside the veil, and the lampstand on the south side of the tabernacle opposite the table; and you shall put the table on the north side.

36 "And you shall make a screen for the door of the tent, of blue and purple and scarlet stuff and fine twined linen, embroidered with needlework. 37 And you shall make for the screen five pillars of acacia, and overlay them with gold; their hooks shall be of gold, and you shall cast five bases of bronze for them.

c) THE VEIL AND THE SCREEN (26:31-37)

31. The Hebrew word for veil used here occurs seventeen times in all and is always used of the screen separating the most holy from the holy place. It apparently had the same decorations as the inner lining of the tent and, like it, was the work of "the skillful designers" who were apparently weavers of colored figures (cf. vs. 1).

32. The veil was a hanging that was to be suspended from golden hooks at the top of four acacia wood pillars. These were overlaid with gold and set in sockets or bases of silver (cf. vs. 19). The hooks were to be of gold. The veil would presumably reach all the way up to the tent overhead.

33. The clasps with which the two halves of the inner and outer tent covers had been hooked together (vss. 6, 11) were immediately over the veil.

34-35. This veil, together with the mercy seat, is for the author a supreme symbol of God's transcendent freedom. But even the freedom of God can deteriorate into a static concept. Heb. 9:7-8; 10:19-22 depict the veil as the symbol of God's unapproachability.

36-37. The word for screen, here used of the hanging at the entrance to the holy place (cf. 35:15; 39:38; 40:8, 28), is also used for the fabric at the entrance to the court (27:16; 35:17; etc.); and with the word for veil it is used of the separation of the holy from the most holy (35:12; 39:34; 40:21). The screen that would constitute the door to the holy place was not as rich as the veil at the most holy place. The beautifully colored yarns were not to be woven into figures in the fabric but would be used by the 27 And thou shalt make an altar of shittim wood, five cubits long, and five cubits broad; the altar shall be four-square: and the height thereof shall be three cubits.

2 And thou shalt make the horns of it upon the four corners thereof: his horns shall be of the same: and thou shalt overlay it with brass.

3 And thou shalt make his pans to receive his ashes, and his shovels, and his basins, and his fleshhooks, and his firepans:

27 "You shall make the altar of acacia wood, five cubits long and five cubits broad; the altar shall be square, and its height shall be three cubits. 2 And you shall make horns for it on its four corners; its horns shall be of one piece with it, and you shall overlay it with bronze. 3 You shall make pots for it to receive its ashes, and embroiderer. There were to be five pillars instead of four, gold covered and with golden hooks for the hanging. But the sockets were to be of bronze instead of silver, probably because of the distance from the holiest place.

6. THE BRASS ALTAR (27:1-8)

Beginning with the ark and moving outward, the instructions (chs. 25-31) treat each item of the cultic apparatus in order, whether of building or of furniture. The cover and walls of the tabernacle were described after the instructions concerning the furniture in the holy place. Now, before turning to the wall of the great court (vss. 9-19), we meet the great altar of burnt offering which is to occupy the central place in the court east of the tabernacle (40:29-30; I Kings 8:64; cf. illustration, Hastings, Dictionary of the Bible, IV, 657).

27:1. The term the altar implies that only one altar is contemplated. The altar of incense is not in mind at all. This altar is "the altar of burnt offering" (30:28; 31:9), also known as "the bronze altar" (38:30; 39:39) because it is finished entirely in bronze. In this respect it is patterned on Solomon's great altar (I Kings 8:64; II Kings 16:10-15; II Chr. 4:1). The bronze is to cover the acacia wood which will constitute the hollow frame of the structure (vs. 8). It is possible that it was contemplated that this hollow center would be filled with earth, thus conforming to the ancient law of the altar (20:24). Ezekiel's model altar was to be made of four stone squares, superimposed one on another, of which the topmost one measured twelve cubits, about ten cubits above the ground. Solomon's altar also is said to have stood ten cubits high with a flat surface measuring twenty by twenty cubits. This altar is much smaller: five by five by three cubits, which corresponds precisely to the size of the brass platform from which Solomon is said to have blessed the people at the consecration of the temple (II Chr. 6:12).

2. The horns of the altar were to be of one piece with it (cf. 25:19, 35) made of wood and brass. These horns were almost the heart of the altar. The blood of the sin offerings was applied to them (29:12). Those seeking asylum at the altar had to touch its horns (I Kings 1:50; 2:28). And the breaking of the horns constituted the destruction of the altar (Amos 3:14). Brass altars with horns were of Canaanite origin, adapted to the worship of Yahweh.

3. The ashes, as the Hebrew indicates, consisted of the encrustations of burned fat on the altar. These were to be removed from the altar whenever it was dismantled for

27:1-2. The Horns of the Altar.—The horns at the four corners of the altar were found also on Assyrian altars. When Israel adopted them, they became the most sacred part of the altar. In I Kings 1:50; 2:28 we find that those seeking refuge from revengeful enemies were safe if they caught hold of them. Every religion, every sermon, every creed must have points at which ordinary folk can take hold. All the sweet incense, the gold and blue and purple and scarlet, the bells and pomegranates, and vestments, are vanity if there is not some place for the fugitive and the sinner to hold on to in his day of distress.

all the vessels thereof thou shalt make of brass.

4 And thou shalt make for it a grate of network of brass; and upon the net shalt thou make four brazen rings in the four corners thereof.

5 And thou shalt put it under the compass of the altar beneath, that the net may be even to the midst of the altar.

6 And thou shalt make staves for the altar, staves of shittim wood, and overlay them with brass.

7 And the staves shall be put into the rings, and the staves shall be upon the two sides of the altar, to bear it.

8 Hollow with boards shalt thou make it: as it was showed thee in the mount, so shall they make it.

9 ¶ And thou shalt make the court of the tabernacle: for the south side southward there shall be hangings for the court of fine twined linen of a hundred cubits long for one side:

10 And the twenty pillars thereof and their twenty sockets shall be of brass; the hooks of the pillars and their fillets shall be of silver.

shovels and basins and forks and fire pans; all its utensils you shall make of bronze.

4 You shall also make for it a grating, a network of bronze; and upon the net you shall make four bronze rings at its four corners.

5 And you shall set it under the ledge of the altar so that the net shall extend half way down the altar. 6 And you shall make poles for the altar, poles of acacia wood, and overlay them with bronze; 7 and the poles shall be put through the rings, so that the poles shall be upon the two sides of the altar, when it is carried. 8 You shall make it hollow, with boards; as it has been shown you on the mountain, so shall it be made.

9 "You shall make the court of the tabernacle. On the south side the court shall have hangings of fine twined linen a hundred cubits long for one side; 10 their pillars shall be twenty and their bases twenty, of bronze, but the hooks of the pillars and travel (Num. 4:13), and perhaps daily. The ashes could be kept temporarily to the east of the altar, probably in the pots or urns prescribed (cf. Lev. 1:16). For final disposal the priests had to carry them outside the camp, along with other waste of the sacrifices (Lev. 4:12; 6:10-11).

4-5. The ledge of the altar is suddenly introduced without further description. It was apparently half way down the altar, one and one-half cubits from its top. The width is not given. In Ezekiel's model altar, consisting of four tiers of stone, the ledge was formed by the difference in size between the third and fourth tiers (Ezek. 43:13-17). The ledge may have been intended as a substitute for the forbidden steps (20:26), though steps are also mentioned in Ezek. 43:17. In P's altar the ledge could have had only an aesthetic or symbolic function. The priests would not have needed to stand on a special elevation to serve at an altar only three cubits high.

The network of bronze was a sort of grille superimposed on the wooden shell. The carrying rings were to be attached to the altar at the corners, somewhere below the ledge.

6-7. The poles correspond to those for the ark and the table, except that they are gilded in bronze rather than in gold (25:13, 28).

7. THE TABERNACLE COURT (27:9-19)

9. The court of the tabernacle is the sacred area surrounding it. Every temple and temple plan in Israel's history was provided with such a court. It is generally agreed that Solomon's temple, like these instructions for the tabernacle, contained only one court. Later temples had two or more.

10-12. The dimensions of the court are one hundred by fifty cubits, a rectangle consisting of two squares. The writer's love of symmetry is clearly apparent. But in his account of the pillars or posts on which the hangings will be put he becomes confusing. For each side there shall be twenty pillars, and for the breadth of the court on the west

11 And likewise for the north side in length there shall be hangings of a hundred cubits long, and his twenty pillars and their twenty sockets of brass; the hooks of the pillars and their fillets of silver.

12 ¶ And for the breadth of the court on the west side shall be hangings of fifty cubits: their pillars ten, and their sockets ten.

13 And the breadth of the court on the east side eastward shall be fifty cubits.

14 The hangings of one side of the gate shall be fifteen cubits: their pillars three, and their sockets three.

15 And on the other side shall be hangings fifteen cubits: their pillars three, and their sockets three.

16 ¶ And for the gate of the court shall be a hanging of twenty cubits, of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen, wrought with needlework: and their pillars shall be four, and their sockets four.

17 All the pillars round about the court shall be filleted with silver; their hooks shall be of silver, and their sockets of brass.

18 ¶ The length of the court shall be a hundred cubits, and the breadth fifty every where, and the height five cubits of fine twined linen, and their sockets of brass.

19 All the vessels of the tabernacle in all the service thereof, and all the pins thereof, their fillets shall be of silver. 11 And likewise for its length on the north side there shall be hangings a hundred cubits long, their pillars twenty and their bases twenty, of bronze, but the hooks of the pillars and their fillets shall be of silver. 12 And for the breadth of the court on the west side there shall be hangings for fifty cubits, with ten pillars and ten bases. 13 The breadth of the court on the front to the east shall be fifty cubits. 14 The hangings for the one side of the gate shall be fifteen cubits, with three pillars and three bases. 15 On the other side the hangings shall be fifteen cubits, with three pillars and three bases. 16 For the gate of the court there shall be a screen twenty cubits long, of blue and purple and scarlet stuff and fine twined linen, embroidered with needlework; it shall have four pillars and with them four bases. 17 All the pillars around the court shall be filleted with silver; their hooks shall be of silver, and their bases of bronze. 18 The length of the court shall be a hundred cubits, the breadth fifty, and the height five cubits, with hangings of fine twined linen and bases of bronze. 19 All the utensils of the tabernacle side ten pillars, each with a single bronze base. The numbers ten and twenty would have yielded completely symmetrical results, also for the more complicated east end (vss. 13-16), if they had applied to the units of hangings between posts rather than to the posts as such. As it is, it is impossible to reconcile the demands with the complete symmetry at which the writer obviously aims. Even Kennedy's clever interpretation fails because it results in putting the screen out of center in the east end (Hastings, Dictionary of the Bible, IV, 657; cf. McNeile, Exodus, pp. lxxviii-lxxix). It seems clear that we are here face to face with the sort of inadvertent slip typical of an amateur, which, however obvious, often escapes discovery until one is confronted by the impasse it implies. It reminds us that this plan, produced in the study, was never actually implemented.

13-16. In the east end of the court the central twenty cubits would constitute the entrance to the court. Whereas the hangings roundabout consist of fine twined linen, without ornamentation, the gate screen is to be embroidered with the blue and purple and scarlet, so constantly used in the plan. The pillars and bases are apparently meant to be the same as all the others.

17. This verse repeats what has already been said in vs. 10; vss. 9, 17-18 are perhaps the oldest (PA) portion of this account. The pillars were all to be filleted with silver. This probably means that each pillar was to have a thin band of silver surrounding it.

18. The wall of the court was to be five cubits high. In Ezekiel's plan for the temple the outer wall was six cubits high (Ezek. 40:5).

19. The utensils are not specified here. The account of the brass laver (30:17-21) is added later. These are, however, the utensils for use at the altar (vs. 3). It seems and all the pins of the court, shall be of brass.

20 ¶ And thou shalt command the children of Israel, that they bring thee pure oil olive beaten for the light, to cause the lamp to burn always.

21 In the tabernacle of the congregation without the veil, which is before the testimony, Aaron and his sons shall order it from evening to morning before the LORD: it shall be a statute for ever unto their generations on the behalf of the children of Israel.

28 And take thou unto thee Aaron thy brother, and his sons with him, from among the children of Israel, that he may minister unto me in the priest's office, even Aaron, Nadab and Abihu, Eleazar and Ithamar, Aaron's sons.

for every use, and all its pegs and all the pegs of the court, shall be of bronze.

20 "And you shall command the people of Israel that they bring to you pure beaten olive oil for the light, that a lamp may be set up to burn continually. 21 In the tent of meeting, outside the veil which is before the testimony, Aaron and his sons shall tend it from evening to morning before the LORD. It shall be a statute for ever to be observed throughout their generations by the people of Israel.

28 "Then bring near to you Aaron your brother, and his sons with him, from among the people of Israel, to serve me as priests — Aaron and Aaron's sons, Nadab and Abi'hu, Elea'zar and Ith'amar.

impossible to include any but utensils in the court in the provision that all the utensils of the tabernacle should be of bronze. Those inside the dwelling were all of gold. It also seems probable that only pegs of the court are actually intended (cf. 35:18; 39:40; Num. 3:37).

8. OIL FOR THE LAMP (27:20-21)

20-21. This regulation was probably inserted here by an editor to serve as an introduction to the section on the priest (chs. 28-29). The care of the lamp was a part of the priest's daily duty. It prescribes the bringing of oil for the lamp, to be observed throughout their generations by the people of Israel. The word statute also means "due" or "obligation." From year to year and age to age oil for the temple lamp (only one is mentioned, despite 25:31-40) must be provided by the faithful.

9. THE PRIESTHOOD AND ITS DRESS (28:1-43)

The setting is in the Mosaic era. Therefore Aaron and his sons are the priests. The latter are only incidentally introduced. The real preoccupation is with Aaron. We must see in him the symbol of the high priest of the postexilic era and in his sons the priests of that time. The description of the garments and functions corresponds to those of the priest in the postexilic period (Ecclus. 45:6-24; 50:1-24). The term "high priest" was not technically employed until after the Exile. There are various forms of it: "high priest" (II Chr. 34:9), "chief priest" (Ezra 7:5; II Chr. 19:11), "ruler of the house of God" (I Chr. 9:11). In the later Hasmonaean period the high priest was primarily a political figure. But here Aaron is singled out for attention because of his religious

20. The Lamp to Burn Continually.—A burning light is the finest symbol of a continuing spiritual presence. To the Hebrews light, the first begotten of God, was the finest, most immaterial substance known, for which no idolatrous corporeal form could be made.

28:1-43. The Vestments of the Priests.—There has always been great difference of opinion in every age of the world's history, both in religious and secular circles, as to whether priests as a profession have exercised on society an influence more good or evil. The priest in every age owes his office partly to untenable ancestral beliefs and superstitions, partly to his present-day usefulness to society. Most of the evils of clericalism are due to the former element in his calling, especially the priest's assumption of special privileges and of supposed miraculous powers. When these are at a minimum, and his special training and skills and knowledge are on a par with those of other professions (such as medicine and law), then the priest performs a real service

2 And thou shalt make holy garments for Aaron thy brother, for glory and for beauty.

3 And thou shalt speak unto all that are wise-hearted, whom I have filled with the spirit of wisdom, that they may make Aaron's garments to consecrate him, that he may minister unto me in the priest's office.

4 And these are the garments which they shall make; a breastplate, and an ephod, and a robe, and a brodered coat, a mitre, and a girdle: and they shall make holy garments for Aaron thy brother, and his sons, that he may minister unto me in the priest's office.

5 And they shall take gold, and blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine linen.

2 And you shall make holy garments for Aaron your brother, for glory and for beauty. 3 And you shall speak to all who have ability, whom I have endowed with an able mind, that they make Aaron's garments to consecrate him for my priesthood. 4 These are the garments which they shall make: a breastpiece, an ephod, a robe, a coat of checkerwork, a turban, and a girdle; they shall make holy garments for Aaron your brother and his sons to serve me as priests.

5 "They shall receive gold, blue and purple and scarlet stuff, and fine twined function. Priestly religion is basically a religion of reconciliation, and in the person of the high priest this reconciliation is effected (cf. 33:12-23). Through Aaron the grace of Yahweh will be mediated to Israel. But Moses is to "put into his hand" this gift of God. Moses remains supreme over the priest.

a) INTRODUCTION (28:1-5)

28:1. Moses must bring near Aaron and his sons to make them priests. To bring near is a technical term denoting consecration. On the basis of the analogous Arabic word kahin, it is probable that etymologically the Hebrew word for priest (kôhên) meant "seer." Originally a priest was especially one who counseled and gave oracles (I Sam. 9). The Urim and Thummim on Aaron's breastplate are a relic of this ancient function. The Zadokite priesthood, which was the one probably considered legitimate by P, claimed an Aaronic pedigree through Eleazar. This late and probably unauthentic claim illustrates that the Mosaic authority and unbroken heredity of the priesthood were held indispensable to its legitimacy.

2. The holy garments served a cultic purpose. They granted the priests access to the sacred precincts not open to laymen. They also served a social purpose—they were for glory and for beauty. They were the sign of the priest's dignity and of his social rank.

3. As Galling suggests (cf. Beer, Exodus, pp. 138-39), vs. 2-3 probably represent this unit in its oldest form (cf. 39:1). The wise-hearted, whom Moses is to command to make Aaron's garments, are not mentioned by name.

4-5. The usual offerings of colored yarn and fine twined linen are to be received by the skillful workers. In addition, gold thread is asked for. In the list of items the golden diadem to be placed on Aaron's turban is not included (cf. vs. 36-38). The short "breeches" (vs. 42) are also left out.

to society. This service consists in his knowledge and appreciation of the history and place of religion in human society throughout the past, in his skill as leader of men toward a more worthy religious life, in his personal character as the fullest expression of religious faith, in his power of expressing through ritual and imaginative presentation the tested truths of real religion. The real priest is characterized by a deep and growing secret religious life, by the common virtues such as are admired by all men, and by a love for men and a real touch with God. He realizes more than most men that the house of truth has many mansions, that others may find God by other ways than his. By meditation and long practice he has attained skill in prayer, in the attainment of an infectious healthy inner life, in influencing the lives of 6 ¶ And they shall make the ephod of gold, of blue, and of purple, of scarlet, and fine twined linen, with cunning work.

7 It shall have the two shoulderpieces thereof joined at the two edges thereof; and so it shall be joined together.

8 And the curious girdle of the ephod, which is upon it, shall be of the same, according to the work thereof; even of gold, of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen.

9 And thou shalt take two onyx stones, and grave on them the names of the children of Israel:

10 Six of their names on one stone, and the other six names of the rest on the other stone, according to their birth.

linen. 6 And they shall make the ephod of gold, of blue and purple and scarlet stuff, and of fine twined linen, skilfully worked.

7 It shall have two shoulder-pieces attached to its two edges, that it may be joined together. 8 And the skilfully woven band upon it, to gird it on, shall be of the same workmanship and materials, of gold, blue and purple and scarlet stuff, and fine twined linen. 9 And you shall take two onyx stones, and engrave on them the names of the sons of Israel, 10 six of their names on the one stone, and the names of the remaining six on the other stone, in the order of their

b) THE EPHOD (28:6-12)

6. The ephod is to be skillfully worked, i.e., the colored patterns shall be woven into the fabrics (cf. 26:1). The ephod was perhaps the oldest cultic garment in Israel. It was in use at Shiloh (I Sam. 2:18-19, 28). David wore an apronlike linen ephod when he brought up the ark (II Sam. 6:14, 15). The ephod was the indispensable piece of equipment for the delivery of an oracle (I Sam. 14:3 ff.; 23:6, 9 ff.). But this raises the question whether in such instances it was a garment worn by the priest or an image or object from which the oracle was obtained. In certain instances the term refers unmistakably to an image or similar object (Judg. 8:27; 17:5; 18:14; Hos. 3:4). The more doubtful cases in which the phrases "bringing the ephod" or "bearing the ephod" occur may indicate the same meaning (I Sam. 2:28; 23:9; 30:7). In P the word is no longer used of an image. The garment seems to have a symbolic function synonymous with the breastpiece.

7. With the aid of the Samar. one may perhaps read this verse as stating two separate facts about the ephod: it will have uniting shoulderpieces or straps, and the two edges of the main piece will be joined, thus making of it a single garment, pull-over style (cf. 39:4). This joining of the edges may have meant the joining of two pieces, front and back, under each of the arms.

8. The skilfully woven band seems to have been a girdle with which to fasten the ephod close about the waist (Lev. 8:7). It was permanently attached to the ephod and made of the same material.

9-10. The two onyx stones (cf. 25:7), on which the names of the sons of Israel are to be engraved, in the order of their birth, is paralleled by the twelve stones of the breastpiece in vss. 17-21. The latter is probably the more recent account. The function others through sympathy and insight. He seeks nothing for himself; and for his church he asks only that it be judged by its fruits in producing good people, fairly criticized for its failings, and allowed to have its place as one among the many ways by which men find God. These are the real sacred garments of the priesthood; breastpieces, ephods, robes, turbans, and girdles are nothing if they are not the outward signs of these inner graces, and they are a very poor substitute for them.

Whitehead says: "Music, ceremonial clothing, ceremonial smells, and ceremonial rhythmic visual appearances, also have symbolic truth, or symbolic falsehood." ⁷ He means that they may suggest the emotion which votaries dumbly feel ought to be attached to the occasion; they provide an emotional clothing which changes the dim objective reality sought for into clear appearance, just as music organizes confused feeling into more distinct apprehension.

⁷ Adventures of Ideas, p. 319.

11 With the work of an engraver in stone, like the engravings of a signet, shalt thou engrave the two stones with the names of the children of Israel: thou shalt make them to be set in ouches of gold.

12 And thou shalt put the two stones upon the shoulders of the ephod for stones of memorial unto the children of Israel: and Aaron shall bear their names before the LORD upon his two shoulders for a memorial.

13 ¶ And thou shalt make ouches of gold;

14 And two chains of pure gold at the ends; of wreathed work shalt thou make them, and fasten the wreathed chains to the ouches.

15 ¶ And thou shalt make the breastplate of judgment with cunning work; after the work of the ephod thou shalt make it; of gold, of blue, and of purple, and of scarlet, and of fine twined linen, shalt thou make it.

16 Foursquare it shall be being doubled; a span shall be the length thereof, and a span shall be the breadth thereof.

17 And thou shalt set in it settings of stones, even four rows of stones: the first row shall be a sardius, a topaz, and a carbuncle: this shall be the first row.

birth. 11 As a jeweler engraves signets, so shall you engrave the two stones with the names of the sons of Israel; you shall enclose them in settings of gold filigree. 12 And you shall set the two stones upon the shoulder-pieces of the ephod, as stones of remembrance for the sons of Israel; and Aaron shall bear their names before the LORD upon his two shoulders for remembrance. 13 And you shall make settings of gold filigree, 14 and two chains of pure gold, twisted like cords; and you shall attach the corded chains to the settings.

15 "And you shall make a breastpiece of judgment, in skilled work; like the work of the ephod you shall make it; of gold, blue and purple and scarlet stuff, and fine twined linen shall you make it. 16 It shall be square and double, a span its length and a span its breadth. 17 And you shall set in it four rows of stones. A row of sardius, topaz, and carbuncle shall be the first row; of the stones in the two is the same: to emphasize that the priestly service represents the entire people (cf. vs. 29).

11-12. The two stones, set in rosette fillings of gold, are likened to signets. These were symbols of authority and commitment in all the ancient world (Gen. 41:42; Jer. 22:24; Hag. 2:23). Aaron's role as priest and his authority are provided by the covenant of grace Yahweh gives to Israel. He must bear their names before the LORD. Israel is the concern of his service.

c) THE BREASTPIECE (28:13-30)

13-14. The chains of pure gold are not links but continuous and interwoven lines of gold cord, "cordage-work" (Amer. Trans., cf. I Kings 7:17).

15-16. The breastpiece is so designated because of its position when worn by the high priest. The Hebrew name of the object is hōshēn. This could mean "beautiful object" but can also be linguistically interpreted as "pouch," and because of its function as the container of the Urim and Thummim this seems the more probable meaning. The same yarns used for the ephod are to be employed. The fabric is to be in skilled work (cf. vs. 6), i.e., there are to be patterns woven in color. The pouch was to be square and double. A span was one half a cubit. It consisted therefore of a piece of fabric a cubit long and folded over. It is usually assumed that the ends were sewed together. Possibly also one end of the resulting pouch was closed.

17-21. The function of the twelve precious stones which are to be set in four rows of three on the outer side of the pouch is identical with that of the two stones on the shoulders of the ephod (vss. 11-12): to bring the twelve tribes of Israel to continual 18 And the second row shall be an emerald, a sapphire, and a diamond.

19 And the third row a ligure, an agate, and an amethyst.

20 And the fourth row a beryl, and an onyx, and a jasper: they shall be set in gold in their inclosings.

21 And the stones shall be with the names of the children of Israel, twelve, according to their names, like the engravings of a signet; every one with his name shall they be according to the twelve tribes.

22 ¶ And thou shalt make upon the breastplate chains at the ends of wreathed work of pure gold.

23 And thou shalt make upon the breastplate two rings of gold, and shalt put the two rings on the two ends of the breastplate.

24 And thou shalt put the two wreathed chains of gold in the two rings which are on the ends of the breastplate.

25 And the other two ends of the two wreathed chains thou shalt fasten in the two ouches, and put them on the shoulder-pieces of the ephod before it.

26 ¶ And thou shalt make two rings of gold, and thou shalt put them upon the two ends of the breastplate in the border thereof, which is in the side of the ephod inward.

27 And two other rings of gold thou shalt make, and shalt put them on the two sides of the ephod underneath, toward the forepart thereof, over against the other coupling thereof, above the curious girdle of the ephod.

18 and the second row an emerald, a sapphire, and a diamond; 19 and the third row a jacinth, an agate, and an amethyst; 20 and the fourth row a beryl, an onyx, and a jasper; they shall be set in gold filigree. 21 There shall be twelve stones with their names according to the names of the sons of Israel; they shall be like signets, each engraved with its name, for the twelve tribes. 22 And you shall make for the breast-piece twisted chains like cords, of pure gold; 23 and you shall make for the breastpiece two rings of gold, and put the two rings on the two edges of the breastpiece. 24 And you shall put the two cords of gold in the two rings at the edges of the breastpiece; 25 the two ends of the two cords you shall attach to the two settings of filigree, and so attach it in front to the shoulder-pieces of the ephod. 26 And you shall make two rings of gold, and put them at the two ends of the breastpiece, on its inside edge next to the ephod. 27 And you shall make two rings of gold, and attach them in front to the lower part of the two shoulder-pieces of the ephod, at its joining above the skilfully remembrance before the LORD (vs. 29). Two other lists of precious stones, probably inspired by this one, and bearing many close resemblances to it in details are found in the Bible. In Ezek. 28:13 the king of Tyre is said to have had a shield of precious stones in which nine of the stones mentioned here are listed (in the LXX all twelve are given). Also, in Rev. 21:19-20 there is a list of twelve precious stones, decorations on the foundation stones of the Holy City, that closely resemble the stones decorating the breastpiece.

22-25. The cords of gold, already mentioned in vs. 14, are to hold up the oracle pouch. For each cord there is a ring of gold at the upper corners of the pouch. The other end of each cord is attached to the two settings of filigree on the forward part of the two shoulderpieces.

26-28. At the lower corners of the pouch there are also to be two rings. Since they are to be used to tie back the pouch so as to prevent it from swinging loose from the ephod, they are placed on the inside fold of the pouch, at the corners. Two other rings are to be put on the ephod (vs. 27). The location of these rings on the ephod has been very difficult. They are said to be on the lower part of the two shoulderpieces. It is literally more correct to say that they are "below the shoulderpieces" (cf. KJV) of the woven band of the ephod. 28 And they shall bind the breastpiece by its rings to the rings of the ephod with a lace of blue, that it may lie upon the skillfully woven band of the ephod, and that the breastpiece shall not come loose from the ephod. 29 So Aaron shall bear the names of the sons of Israel in the breastpiece of judgment upon his heart, when he goes into the holy place, to bring them to continual remembrance before the LORD. 30 And in the breastpiece of judgment you shall put the Urim and the Thummim, and they shall be upon Aaron's heart, when he goes in before the LORD; thus Aaron shall bear the judgment of the people of Israel upon his heart before the LORD continually.

28 And they shall bind the breastplate by the rings thereof unto the rings of the ephod with a lace of blue, that it may be above the curious girdle of the ephod, and that the breastplate be not loosed from the ephod.

29 And Aaron shall bear the names of the children of Israel in the breastplate of judgment upon his heart, when he goeth in unto the holy place, for a memorial before the LORD continually.

30 ¶ And thou shalt put in the breastplate of judgment the Urim and the Thummim; and they shall be upon Aaron's heart, when he goeth in before the LORD: and Aaron shall bear the judgment of the children of Israel upon his heart before the LORD continually.

ephod, near its seam, i.e., where the edges of the ephod were joined (cf. vs. 7). It has been suggested that there was a "seam" under each of the arms. And thus these rings would be at the two sides of the ephod, just in front of the seams, and just above the "skillfully woven band" or girdle which went about the waist (cf. vs. 8). A lace of blue ran through the rings of the lower corners of the pouch, tied back from the pouch by means of these rings on the ephod under the arms just above the waist.

29-30. The priest has a double function. He must make intercession for the people before God, and he must declare God's will to the people. Originally the Urim and Thummim dealt solely with the latter. They were oracular media by which the priest obtained God's decision for the people (Num. 27:21; Deut. 33:8; I Sam. 28:6). The use of Urim and Thummim was apparently a prerogative of the priests. In this account the pouch is still called the breastpiece of judgment, but by means of the twelve beautiful stones it has become a symbol of the intercessory role of the priest. There is no evidence that the Urim and Thummim were actually used as oracular media in the postexilic era. Ezra 2:63 seems to show that they were not.

30. The Urim and Thummim.—John Newton in the eighteenth century said,

[They] were something in Aaron's breast-plate; but what, critics and commentators are by no means agreed. . . . It is most probable that they were only names given to signify the clearness and certainty of the divine answers which were obtained by the high priest consulting God with his breast-plate on, in contradistinction to the obscure, enigmatical, uncertain, and imperfect answers of the heathen oracles.⁹

I Sam. 14:41-42; 28:6 seem to indicate that originally they had been two stones used for casting lots to discover the guilt or innocence of suspected parties. Every court of law has to have some similar device for suggesting to the public that its decisions are not merely personal judgments. The difficulty about the use of Urim and Thummim, as is seen by the references to its application in the O.T., was that there are so many questions which cannot be answered by a mere yes or no, and that it was necessary to agree beforehand on the exact way in which the oracle was to be interpreted. The same difficulty exists today when the Constitution and precedent take the place of Urim and Thummim.

⁹ Samuel Johnson, A Dictionary of the English Language (London: W. Strahan, 1755-56), s.v. "Urim."

It was also early recognized that the use of such oracles placed too much power in the hands of the priests. At the beginning of the thirteenth century Gottfried von Strassburg comments on the use of similar tests with the words, "so the blessed Lord can be blown this way or that like the sleeve of a coat."⁹

⁹ Tristan, ed. Reinhold Bechstein (3rd ed.; Leipzig: F. A. Brockhaus, 1891), p. 187.

31 ¶ And thou shalt make the robe of the ephod all of blue.

32 And there shall be a hole in the top of it, in the midst thereof: it shall have a binding of woven work round about the hole of it, as it were the hole of an habergeon, that it be not rent.

33 ¶ And beneath upon the hem of it thou shalt make pomegranates of blue, and of purple, and of scarlet, round about the hem thereof; and bells of gold between them round about:

34 A golden bell and a pomegranate, a golden bell and a pomegranate, upon the hem of the robe round about.

35 And it shall be upon Aaron to minister: and his sound shall be heard when he goeth in unto the holy place before the LORD, and when he cometh out, that he die not.

31 "And you shall make the robe of the ephod all of blue. 32 It shall have in it an opening for the head, with a woven binding around the opening, like the opening in a garment,^p that it may not be torn. 33 On its skirts you shall make pomegranates of blue and purple and scarlet stuff, around its skirts, with bells of gold between them, 34 a golden bell and a pomegranate, a golden bell and a pomegranate, round about on the skirts of the robe. 35 And it shall be upon Aaron when he ministers, and its sound shall be heard when he goes into the holy place before the LORD, and when he comes out, lest he die.

^p The Hebrew word is of uncertain meaning

d) THE ROBE OF THE EPHOD (28:31-35)

31-35. The robe of the ephod is a separate garment, the me'il, over which the ephod and breastpiece are placed. Their wearing is the prerogative of the high priest alone. It is called the robe of the ephod to indicate its distinctly cultic character when worn by the priest. Originally it was the robe of the nobleman (I Sam. 18:4). But here this civil dress, fringed with pomegranates and bells, is set aside for sacred use. It was woven all of blue or rather of purple (cf. 25:4). In postexilic Israel, when Israel was a semi-autonomous religious community within a larger political state, the high priest also commonly carried the "princely" function of being the political representative of his people before the foreign ruler. The robe was symbolic of this role.

The opening for the head—"in the midst of it" (Hebrew)—speaks for the view commonly expressed (cf. Driver, Exodus, p. 307; Beer, Exodus, p. 142) that the me'il was a garment that had to be put on over the head. As such, in the Fourth Gospel it becomes the prototype for the seamless robe of Christ. A closely woven band bordered the edge of the head opening, like the opening in a garment, to prevent tearing. The pomegranates, in mixed colors, were ultimately perhaps derived from the nature mysticism of Canaanite Palestine. They were also used for decorative purposes in Solomon's temple (I Kings 7:20, 42). The sound of the robe would be heard when Aaron entered and left the temple. We are not told that the bells made the sound, though that must perhaps be assumed. Nor are we told whether God or the people would hear. In view of the phrase lest he die the implication is that either demons or God

34. A Golden Bell and a Pomegranate.—The best explanation of these is in vs. 40, for glory and for beauty. There may have been archaeological reasons for them, but they had been forgotten, and the people sewed them around the high priest's skirts for much the same reason that Browning used them as the title of several of his books of verse—because they liked the look and the sound of them. Bells and pomegranates, a sweet sound and a sweet savor, still a good text upon which to speak of the beautiful place a church should be. The picture of the priest in all his robes, with the names of all the families of the congregation carved, each on a jewel on his breast, going into the holy place, the people following his progress by the sound of the bells, fragrant incense rising to heaven like the prayers of the faithful, makes 36 ¶ And thou shalt make a plate of pure gold, and grave upon it, like the engravings of a signet, HOLINESS TO THE LORD.

37 And thou shalt put it on a blue lace, that it may be upon the mitre; upon the forefront of the mitre it shall be.

38 And it shall be upon Aaron's forehead, that Aaron may bear the iniquity of the holy things, which the children of Israel shall hallow in all their holy gifts; and it shall be always upon his forehead, that they may be accepted before the LORD.

39 ¶ And thou shalt embroider the coat of fine linen, and thou shalt make the mitre of fine linen, and thou shalt make the girdle of needlework.

36 "And you shall make a plate of pure gold, and engrave on it, like the engraving of a signet, 'Holy to the LORD.' 37 And you shall fasten it on the turban by a lace of blue; it shall be on the front of the turban. 38 It shall be upon Aaron's forehead, and Aaron shall take upon himself any guilt incurred in the holy offering which the people of Israel hallow as their holy gifts; it shall always be upon his forehead, that they may be accepted before the LORD.

39 "And you shall weave the coat in checkerwork of fine linen, and you shall make a turban of fine linen, and you shall make a girdle embroidered with needlework.

would hear. The priestly robe was a protection against the demons who might want to slay one seeking an audience with God.

e) THE DIADEM, TURBAN, AND COAT (28:36-39)

Vss. 36-38 were apparently inserted after vs. 39, for the turban which is assumed in vs. 37 is first provided for in the instructions in vs. 39. In the parallel account (ch. 39), reporting the manufacture of the objects, the coats for Aaron and his sons, the turban for Aaron, the caps for the sons, and the girdle come first (39:27-29). The making of the plate and its attachment to the turban follow (39:30-31).

36. The plate of pure gold was equivalent to a diadem or crown. Its name is taken from the root meaning "to shine" (cf. Ps. 132:18). The diadem reminds us that in the postexilic community the high priest had the role of a "prince" (vss. 31-35). The phrase Holy to the LORD inscribed on the plate signifies that the priest, and through him all Israel, belongs to Yahweh or is set apart for his peculiar service.

37. The turban or mitre means lit., "that which is wrapped." It was probably a tall cone-shaped headdress. In Ezek. 21:26 (Hebrew vs. 31) the turban is a royal sign (cf. Zech. 3:5).

39. The turban was for Aaron alone. The coat, which was the long tunic worn underneath the purple robe, was part of the normal dress of every man. For the priest it is to be woven in checkerwork of fine linen; 39:27 seems to indicate that the coats for Aaron and his sons were identical (cf. vs. 40). In 39:29 only one girdle is reported as having been made with needlework. We do not learn how or whether the girdles for the sons were made, but we may assume that they were the same as Aaron's. The turban with its diadem, the ephod, the robe and the breastpiece are the distinctive objects of the high priest.

one wonder about the contrast with some modern methods of worshiping God, as Browning did in his Christmas-Eve and Easter-Day.¹ In Christian times the sound deemed most abhorrent to the ears of fiends and goblins has been the sweet and solemn sound of church bells.

36. Holy to the Lord.—These words refer neither to the turban nor to the priest as an individual (19:6), but to the relation of Israel (in the person of their representative) to God. The people are a sacred object belonging to Yahweh. The meaning is the same as the motto on the seal in II Tim. 2:19, prophetic of Heb. 7:25. The responsibility for the service rests largely upon the priest (Num. 18:1). He must see to it that, in the words of the communion collect, "We may . . . worthily magnify thy holy Name."

¹ See also Frazer, Folk-lore in O.T., III, 446-80.

40 ¶ And for Aaron's sons thou shalt make coats, and thou shalt make for them girdles, and bonnets shalt thou make for them, for glory and for beauty.

41 And thou shalt put them upon Aaron thy brother, and his sons with him; and shalt anoint them, and consecrate them, and sanctify them, that they may minister unto me in the priest's office.

42 And thou shalt make them linen breeches to cover their nakedness; from the loins even unto the thighs they shall reach:

43 And they shall be upon Aaron, and upon his sons, when they come in unto the tabernacle of the congregation, or when they come near unto the altar to minister in the holy place; that they bear not iniquity, and die: it shall be a statute for ever unto him and his seed after him.

29 And this is the thing that thou shalt do unto them to hallow them, to minister unto me in the priest's office: Take one young bullock, and two rams without blemish, 40 "And for Aaron's sons you shall make coats and girdles and caps; you shall make them for glory and beauty. 41 And you shall put them upon Aaron your brother, and upon his sons with him, and shall anoint them and ordain them and consecrate them, that they may serve me as priests. 42 And you shall make for them linen breeches to cover their naked flesh; from the loins to the thighs they shall reach; 43 and they shall be upon Aaron, and upon his sons, when they go into the tent of meeting, or when they come near the altar to minister in the holy place; lest they bring guilt upon themselves and die. This shall be a perpetual statute for him and for his descendants after him.

29 "Now this is what you shall do to them to consecrate them, that they may serve me as priests. Take one young

f) THE GARMENTS FOR AARON'S SONS (28:40-43)

40-41. The caps for Aaron's sons were apparently different from the turban of the high priest. A different Hebrew word is used for them (cf. Lev. 8:13). It implies a high or cuplike covering. The girdles were sashes with which the coats were bound about the waist; they seem to have been very long (cf. Josephus Antiquities III. 7. 2). Today in some parts of the Near East, notably among the Kurds, the social status of a man is indicated by the length of his sash.

42-43. The linen breeches, from the loins to the thighs, may have been loincloths (cf. LXX ad loc.; Josephus Antiquities III. 7. 1). The word is taken from a root meaning "to gather." The term breeches rests chiefly on the interpretation of it as a dual. The actual function of the loincloth dates back to the period when the ephod was the only garment prescribed for the priest (cf. 20:26; II Sam. 6:12-19). The tabernacle is designated as the tent of meeting. The holy place probably refers to the great court in which the altar of burnt offering stood, although strictly it refers to the interior of the tabernacle or temple. In later postexilic times only priests could approach the altar of burnt offering.

10. THE CONSECRATION OF PRIESTS (29:1-42a)

The instructions for the consecration of the priests were probably suggested by the report on their consecration by Moses in Lev. 8. Driver (Exodus, p. 315) has pointed out that the manner of the ceremonial, especially with respect to the manner of 29:1-28. The Prerogatives of the Priests.—Chs. 28-30 are best studied in connection with Lev. 8; Num. 8. Even at this early date the clergy received remuneration. A part of the sacrificed animal was reserved for their use after it had been offered to the Lord. This custom has led to many abuses and the enrichment of the priesthood both personally and corporately. Among others, the Quakers protested against the appointment of professional clergy, holding that the appointment of one man to preach to the exclusion of others was a limitation to the work of the Spirit. However, Robert Barclay in 1676 recognized that the care of a group might re-

2 And unleavened bread, and cakes unleavened tempered with oil, and wafers unleavened anointed with oil: of wheaten flour shalt thou make them.

3 And thou shalt put them into one basket, and bring them in the basket, with the bullock and the two rams.

4 And Aaron and his sons thou shalt bring unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and shalt wash them with water.

5 And thou shalt take the garments, and put upon Aaron the coat, and the robe of the ephod, and the ephod, and the breastplate, and gird him with the curious girdle of the ephod:

bull and two rams without blemish, 2 and unleavened bread, unleavened cakes mixed with oil, and unleavened wafers spread with oil. You shall make them of fine wheat flour.

3 And you shall put them in one basket and bring them in the basket, and bring the bull and the two rams. 4 You shall bring Aaron and his sons to the door of the tent of meeting, and wash them with water.

5 And you shall take the garments, and put on Aaron the coat and the robe of the ephod, and the ephod, and the breastpiece, and gird him with the skilfully woven the sacrifices, presupposes the regulations of Lev. 1-7, which tends to the conclusion that the Levitical code was extant when this P account was written.

a) THE PRESENTATION (29:1-9)

29:1-3. The bread, cakes, and wafers, along with the bullock and the two rams are to be "brought near," i.e., presented in ritual fashion. The unleavened cakes made of "wheat germ" (Lev. 24:5) were a normal part of a peace offering (Lev. 7:12). They were mixed with oil. In contrast, the very thin unleavened wafers were anointed with oil. The name of the latter means, lit., "thin." A bread of this type, by the same name, is still common in the Near East (khubzun raqiqun). The bullock will serve as sin offering (vss. 10-14). One of the rams is a whole burnt offering (vss. 15-18). The other constitutes the sacrifice of consecration.

4. Three steps are involved in the preparation of Aaron and his sons. Moses was to cause them to "draw near" to the door of the tent of meeting where the presentation took place. First he was to wash them. In contrast to the daily ablutions of hands and feet (30:19-21), this was a washing of the entire body (cf. John 13:10; Heb. 10:22).

5-6. The second step in the preparation is the vesting of the priests. For this Aaron is singled out for special attention (cf. Lev. 8:7-9).

quire a man's whole time, to the exclusion of other remunerative work. He wrote:

Also they who have received this holy and unspotted gift, as they have freely received it, so are they freely to give it, without hire or bargaining, far less to use it as a Trade to get money by: Yet if God hath called any one from their employment or trades, by which they acquire their livelihood, it may be lawful for such, according to the liberty which they feel given them in the Lord, to receive such temporals (to wit, what may be needful for them for meat and clothing) as are given them freely and cordially by those to whom they have communicated spirituals.²

This seems to be a similar arrangement to that commended in the text.

² An Apology for the True Christian Divinity (Providence: Knowles & Vose, 1840), Prop. X, p. 271.

George Tyrrell wrote in one of his letters:

I will do what I can with the problem of the absolute necessity and the absolute impossibility of Churches. . . . As long as priests make their living by the altar they will be suspected (even where they are not guilty) of self-interested teaching. This is a great source of the weakness of religion in all ages and nations; not only as bringing priests (and consequently their cause) into discredit, but as separating Church life from civil-life to the great detriment of both.³

He felt that the corporate self-interestedness of all the churches was the great obstacle in the way of Christianity. Albert Schweitzer in Lambaréné and the Friends in every stricken land point us toward a better way.

³ M. D. Petre, Autobiography and Life of George Tyrrell (New York: Longmans, Green & Co., 1912), II, 376.

6 And thou shalt put the mitre upon his head, and put the holy crown upon the mitre.

7 Then shalt thou take the anointing oil, and pour it upon his head, and anoint him.

8 And thou shalt bring his sons, and put coats upon them.

9 And thou shalt gird them with girdles, Aaron and his sons, and put the bonnets on them; and the priest's office shall be theirs for a perpetual statute: and thou shalt consecrate Aaron and his sons.

10 And thou shalt cause a bullock to be brought before the tabernacle of the congregation; and Aaron and his sons shall put their hands upon the head of the bullock.

11 And thou shalt kill the bullock before the LORD, by the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

12 And thou shalt take of the blood of the bullock, and put it upon the horns of the altar with thy finger, and pour all the blood beside the bottom of the altar.

band of the ephod: 6 and you shall set the turban on his head, and put the holy crown upon the turban. 7 And you shall take the anointing oil, and pour it on his head and anoint him. 8 Then you shall bring his sons, and put coats on them, 9 and you shall gird them with girdles^g and bind caps on them; and the priesthood shall be theirs by a perpetual statute. Thus you shall ordain Aaron and his sons.

10 "Then you shall bring the bull before the tent of meeting. Aaron and his sons shall lay their hands upon the head of the bull, 11 and you shall kill the bull before the LORD, at the door of the tent of meeting, 12 and shall take part of the blood of the bull and put it upon the horns of the altar with your finger, and the rest of^r the blood you shall pour out at the base of the

^g Gk. Heb girdles, Aaron and his sons

^r Heb all

7. The third step consists in the anointing of Aaron with oil as a sign of his consecration to the priestly office. The oil, scented with precious perfumes (30:22-33), was poured out on the high priest's head (cf. Ps. 133:2). The anointing of priests is reported first in the P stratum. First only the high priest was anointed; so here (cf. Lev. 16:32; 21:10). Later the anointing of all priests became mandatory (28:41; 30:30; 40:15).

8-9. The vesting of the sons of Aaron is left to the last. While the high priest lives they serve as auxiliary priests (Ecclus. 50:12). Their chief distinction was that they were the heirs of Aaron; the priesthood was theirs by a perpetual statute. To ordain Aaron and his sons consisted in "filling their hands" with priestly authority. The supremacy of Moses consisted in God's choice of him for this task.

b) THE SIN OFFERING AND BURNT OFFERING (29:10-18)

10. Sin offerings were made on certain high occasions, both for individuals and for the entire community. First in this respect stands the great day of Atonement. But also on great festal occasions, such as Passover week (Ezek. 45:22, 23), sin offerings were appropriate. The bullock was the prescribed sin offering for the priest (Lev. 4:1-12). But this sacrifice, to induct Aaron and his sons, differs in that he does not offer in his own behalf, but brings his sacrifice to Moses.

11. The provision that the bullock be killed at the door of the tent of meeting is synonymous with "before the LORD" (Lev. 1:5; 3:7; 4:4, 15) and also, it seems, with the specific direction that the slaying shall take place to the north of the great altar (Lev. 1:11).

12. The officiating priest must dip his finger in the blood, not only to anoint the horns of the altar with it but to sprinkle the blood seven times before the veil that separates the holy place from the most holy (Lev. 4:5, 17). The blood is a "covering" for the sin for which the sacrifice is brought, whether this sin is specifiable or not (Lev. 4:26, 35). It is the sign of forgiveness.

13 And thou shalt take all the fat that covereth the inwards, and the caul that is above the liver, and the two kidneys, and the fat that is upon them, and burn them upon the altar.

14 But the flesh of the bullock, and his skin, and his dung, shalt thou burn with fire without the camp: it is a sin offering.

15 ¶ Thou shalt also take one ram; and Aaron and his sons shall put their hands upon the head of the ram.

16 And thou shalt slay the ram, and thou shalt take his blood, and sprinkle it round about upon the altar.

17 And thou shalt cut the ram in pieces, and wash the inwards of him, and his legs, and put them unto his pieces, and unto his head.

18 And thou shalt burn the whole ram upon the altar: it is a burnt offering unto the LORD: it is a sweet savor, an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

19 ¶ And thou shalt take the other ram; and Aaron and his sons shall put their hands upon the head of the ram.

altar. 13 And you shall take all the fat that covers the entrails, and the appendage of the liver, and the two kidneys with the fat that is on them, and burn them upon the altar. 14 But the flesh of the bull, and its skin, and its dung, you shall burn with fire outside the camp; it is a sin offering.

15 "Then you shall take one of the rams, and Aaron and his sons shall lay their hands upon the head of the ram, 16 and you shall slaughter the ram, and shall take its blood and throw it against the altar round about. 17 Then you shall cut the ram into pieces, and wash its entrails and its legs, and put them with its pieces and its head, 18 and burn the whole ram upon the altar; it is a burnt offering to the LORD; it is a pleasing odor, an offering by fire to the LORD.

19 "You shall take the other ram; and Aaron and his sons shall lay their hands

13-14. Of a sin offering nothing is eaten. Only certain pieces of fat, . . . the appendage of the liver, and the two kidneys were to be burned on the altar (Lev. 4:8-10). All the rest was to be burned outside the camp. When the sin offering was made in behalf of another than the priests, the priests could eat what was not burned on the altar (Lev. 5:13; 6:26).

15-18. Unlike the sin offering, the burnt offering for which one of the rams is used has only a casual relation to the ordination ceremony as such. It is a very traditional form of sacrifice, appropriate for every occasion. Its central religious theme is adoration. Because Aaron and his sons lay their hands upon it, the ram is presented as their offering of praise.

c) THE SACRIFICE OF INSTALLATION (29:19-36a)

The sacrifice of installation follows the general pattern of the peace offering. It consists of both animal and cereal portions. Also Aaron and his sons, who in this case occupy the role of ordinary worshipers, are to consume the major portion of the offering as a fellowship meal. The peace offering was chiefly the sacrifice of fellowship, as the whole burnt offering was the sacrifice of adoration.

19-21. Aaron and his sons play the role of ordinary worshipers. They lay their hands upon the head of the ram and so identify themselves with it. We are given the impression that Moses slew the ram (cf. vs. 11). He is to use some of the blood to apply to the tips of the right ears of [Aaron and] his sons, . . . the thumbs of their right hands, and . . . the great toes of their right feet. The same procedure is followed in the rite for the purification of lepers, both oil and blood being used (Lev. 14:14, 17). But in that rite the blood is obtained from a guilt offering and so has an expiatory significance. That seems ruled out in this case. A less formalized analogy to the ceremony prescribed here may be represented in 24:6, 8. The later symbolic significance of this application of 20 Then shalt thou kill the ram, and take of his blood, and put it upon the tip of the right ear of Aaron, and upon the tip of the right ear of his sons, and upon the thumb of their right hand, and upon the great toe of their right foot, and sprinkle the blood upon the altar round about.

21 And thou shalt take of the blood that is upon the altar, and of the anointing oil, and sprinkle it upon Aaron, and upon his garments, and upon his sons, and upon the garments of his sons with him: and he shall be hallowed, and his garments, and his sons, and his sons' garments with him.

22 Also thou shalt take of the ram the fat and the rump, and the fat that covereth the inwards, and the caul above the liver, and the two kidneys, and the fat that is upon them, and the right shoulder; for it is a ram of consecration:

23 And one loaf of bread, and one cake of oiled bread, and one wafer out of the basket of the unleavened bread that is before the LORD.

24 And thou shalt put all in the hands of Aaron, and in the hands of his sons; and shalt wave them for a wave offering before the LORD.

25 And thou shalt receive them of their hands, and burn them upon the altar for a burnt offering, for a sweet savor before the LORD: it is an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

upon the head of the ram, ²⁰ and you shall kill the ram, and take part of its blood and put it upon the tip of the right ear of Aaron and upon the tips of the right ears of his sons, and upon the thumbs of their right hands, and upon the great toes of their right feet, and throw the rest of the blood against the altar round about. ²¹ Then you shall take part of the blood that is on the altar, and of the anointing oil, and sprinkle it upon Aaron and his garments, and upon his sons and his sons' garments with him; and he and his garments shall be holy, and his sons and his sons' garments with him.

22 "You shall also take the fat of the ram, and the fat tail, and the fat that covers the entrails, and the appendage of the liver, and the two kidneys with the fat that is on them, and the right thigh (for it is a ram of ordination), ²³ and one loaf of bread, and one cake of bread with oil, and one wafer, out of the basket of unleavened bread that is before the LORD; ²⁴ and you shall put all these in the hands of Aaron and in the hands of his sons, and wave them for a wave offering before the LORD. ²⁵ Then you shall take them from their hands, and burn them on the altar in addition to the burnt offering, as a pleasing odor before the LORD; it is an offering by fire to the LORD.

blood (McNeile, Exodus, p. 190) may well have been that the priests were to heed God's word, do his work, and walk in his ways. But it is admitted by all that the rite has a very long history, and that in its primitive forms it represented a protection against demonic forces. Exegetes all recognize in vs. 21 a very late addition (Galling, McNeile) which seeks to extend the anointing (vs. 7) and the application of blood to the priests' garments.

22-23. The portions of the fat and the kidneys set aside to be burned on the altar correspond to the portions of the peace offering so assigned in Lev. 3:3-5. To these the right thigh is added. This was normally of the priests' portion (vs. 27; cf. Lev. 7:31-32), but this is a ram of ordination. Except for Moses, there are as yet no priests to claim the portion. One of each of the kinds of bread in the basket (vs. 3) is added to the portion of Yahweh.

24. The portions to be burned are first put into the hands of the priests. This "filling of the hands" is the very heart of the ordination rite. It symbolizes two things: (a) the priests are authorized to receive the sacrifices and prepare them for presentation to God, which is their chief function; (b) it is the prerogative of the priests to "live off the altar." The term wave offering is not applicable to the portion to be burned on the altar. Those portions that go to the priests are waved. Here it may signify the future prerogative of the priests in this respect.

26 And thou shalt take the breast of the ram of Aaron's consecration, and wave it for a wave offering before the LORD: and it shall be thy part.

27 And thou shalt sanctify the breast of the wave offering, and the shoulder of the heave offering, which is waved, and which is heaved up, of the ram of the consecration, even of that which is for Aaron, and of that which is for his sons:

28 And it shall be Aaron's and his sons' by a statute for ever from the children of Israel; for it is a heave offering: and it shall be a heave offering from the children of Israel of the sacrifice of their peace offerings, even their heave offering unto the LORD.

29 ¶ And the holy garments of Aaron shall be his sons' after him, to be anointed therein, and to be consecrated in them.

30 And that son that is priest in his stead shall put them on seven days, when he cometh into the tabernacle of the congregation to minister in the holy place.

31 ¶ And thou shalt take the ram of the consecration, and seethe his flesh in the holy place.

32 And Aaron and his sons shall eat the flesh of the ram, and the bread that is in the basket, by the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

26 "And you shall take the breast of the ram of Aaron's ordination and wave it for a wave offering before the LORD; and it shall be your portion. 27 And you shall consecrate the breast of the wave offering, and the thigh of the priests' portion, which is waved, and which is offered from the ram of ordination, since it is for Aaron and for his sons. 28 It shall be for Aaron and his sons as a perpetual due from the people of Israel, for it is the priests' portion to be offered by the people of Israel from their peace offerings; it is their offering to the LORD.

29 "The holy garments of Aaron shall be for his sons after him, to be anointed in them and ordained in them. 30 The son who is priest in his place shall wear them seven days, when he comes into the tent of meeting to minister in the holy place.

31 "You shall take the ram of ordination, and boil its flesh in a holy place; 32 and Aaron and his sons shall eat the flesh of the ram and the bread that is in the basket, at

26. The breast of the ram was also a regular part of the priests' portion (Lev. 7:34; 10:14). This Moses is to take for himself, since he is the priest, and as officiating priest he is to wave it for a wave offering, i.e., move it out toward the altar and then draw it back, much as offering plates are handled in some churches.

27-28. These two verses are best understood as not directly related to this sacrifice. They are rather an explanatory note to the effect that the breast of the wave offering and the thigh of the priests' portion are for the personal use of Aaron and his sons. They are to take them from all peace offerings brought by the children of Israel.

29-30. These verses constitute another general note. The garments of Aaron become the hereditary possession of the priesthood. They are to be anointed in them. Only the high priest is anointed. Apparently it is assumed that the ceremony of installation (vs. 24) is repeated upon accession to the high priesthood. The seven-day period of the ceremony is to be inferred (cf. vs. 35).

31-32. In peace offering, after the portions for the altar and the priest had been contributed (vs. 27), the worshipers who brought the sacrifice were to consume the remainder in the sacred precincts while in a state of ritual purity (Lev. 7:15-21). The priest boiled the flesh for them (I Sam. 2:13). Here Moses seems to act as priest and the sacrifice is brought by Aaron and his sons (cf. Lev. 8:31). The boiling of the flesh is generally considered an older form of its preparation than roasting (cf. 12:8; Deut. 16:7). Beer (Exodus, p. 65), however, thinks roasting was a very primitive form and this P reference to boiling offers some support to his contention.

33 And they shall eat those things where- with the atonement was made, to conse- crate and to sanctify them: but a stranger shall not eat thereof, because they are holy.

34 And if aught of the flesh of the con- secrations, or of the bread, remain unto the morning, then thou shalt burn the remain- der with fire: it shall not be eaten, because it is holy.

35 And thus shalt thou do unto Aaron, and to his sons, according to all things which I have commanded thee: seven days shalt thou consecrate them.

36 And thou shalt offer every day a bul- lock for a sin offering for atonement: and thou shalt cleanse the altar, when thou hast made an atonement for it, and thou shalt anoint it, to sanctify it.

37 Seven days thou shalt make an atone- ment for the altar, and sanctify it; and it shall be an altar most holy: whatsoever toucheth the altar shall be holy.

38 ¶ Now this is that which thou shalt offer upon the altar; two lambs of the first year day by day continually.

39 The one lamb thou shalt offer in the morning; and the other lamb thou shalt offer at even:

the door of the tent of meeting. 33 They shall eat those things with which atonement was made, to ordain and consecrate them, but an outsider shall not eat of them, be- cause they are holy. 34 And if any of the flesh for the ordination, or of the bread, remain until the morning, then you shall burn the remainder with fire; it shall not be eaten, because it is holy.

35 "Thus you shall do to Aaron and to his sons, according to all that I have com- manded you; through seven days shall you ordain them, 36 and every day you shall offer a bull as a sin offering for atonement. Also you shall offer a sin offering for the altar, when you make atonement for it, and shall anoint it, to consecrate it. 37 Seven days you shall make atonement for the altar, and consecrate it, and the altar shall be most holy; whatever touches the altar shall become holy.

38 "Now this is what you shall offer upon the altar: two lambs a year old day by day continually. 39 One lamb you shall offer in the morning, and the other lamb you shall 33-34. The newly installed priests shall eat of the ram as the bread with which atonement was made at their induction. Atonement, "covering," is used here with respect to a peace offering. The idea of the removal of guilt is not included in the meaning of atonement as used here (cf. S. R. Driver, "Atonement," in Hastings, Dictionary of the Bible, IV, 128). The unhallowed person or stranger here means anyone not being consecrated to the priesthood. The term stranger as used in P often means the layman as over against the priest (Num. 3:10, 38). The Hebrew word (zār) should be distin- guished from gēr (a person socially or tribally different) and nokhri (a foreigner).

35-36a. The ceremony of installation lasted seven days. The ceremonial washing, dressing, and anointing were performed only on the first day. But the sacrifices were to be repeated every day. During this period the priests were to remain in the sacred enclosure (Lev. 8:33).

The sin offering for atonement here prescribed seems to be a late addition. Nothing is said about such an offering for the priests in the description of the installation ceremony, either here or in Lev. 8.

d) THE GREAT ALTAR (29:36b-42a)

36b-37. The prescription of a sin offering for the altar has nothing to do with the consecration of the priests as such. Its appearance here is anachronistic. These verses must represent a late editor's attempt to harmonize the tabernacle instructions respecting the altar with Ezek. 43:18-27.

38-42a. The prescription for the daily burnt offering given here corresponds exactly to Num. 28:3-8. In the pre-exilic period the lamb of the burnt offering was sacrificed in the morning, and the cereal offering was made at night (II Kings 16:15). This custom was so well established that to refer to the cereal offering (minḥāh) was synonymous

40 And with the one lamb a tenth deal of flour mingled with the fourth part of a hin of beaten oil; and the fourth part of a hin of wine for a drink offering.

41 And the other lamb thou shalt offer at even, and shalt do thereto according to the meat offering of the morning, and according to the drink offering thereof, for a sweet savor, an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

42 This shall be a continual burnt offering throughout your generations at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation before the LORD, where I will meet you, to speak there unto thee.

43 And there I will meet with the children of Israel, and the tabernacle shall be sanctified by my glory.

44 And I will sanctify the tabernacle of the congregation, and the altar: I will sanctify also both Aaron and his sons, to minister to me in the priest's office.

offer in the evening; 40 and with the first lamb a tenth measure of fine flour mingled with a fourth of a hin of beaten oil, and a fourth of a hin of wine for a libation. 41 And the other lamb you shall offer in the evening, and shall offer with it a cereal offering and its libation, as in the morning, for a pleasing odor, an offering by fire to the LORD. 42 It shall be a continual burnt offering throughout your generations at the door of the tent of meeting before the LORD, where I will meet with you, to speak there to you. 43 There I will meet with the people of Israel, and it shall be sanctified by my glory; 44 I will consecrate the tent of meeting and the altar; Aaron also and his sons I with a reference to evening (I Kings 18:29, 36; cf. Dan. 9:21). In Ezekiel's plan for a restored service (Ezek. 46:18-25) both of the daily sacrifices were placed in the morning. They consisted of one lamb, one sixth of an ephah of meal, and one third of a hin of oil. The libation of wine is omitted. In this plan, as in Num. 28:3-8, the cereal offering has lost its independent status. Also, as compared with Ezek. 46:13-15, the cereal is reduced in proportion to the animal sacrifice. For there are to be two lambs, one in the morning and another in the evening. To accompany each one-tenth ephah of meal and one-quarter hin each of oil and of wine are required. An ephah is about a bushel, a hin about one and one-half gallons.

11. CONCLUSION (29:42b-46)

We are here at the conclusion of the main body (PA and PB) of the P instructions concerning the tabernacle. The mixed items that follow are all of very late origin (PS). Galling (Beer, Exodus, p. 147) would except from this 31:12-17, which he thinks was originally, with 29:42b-46, part of a single conclusion.

42b-43. In the conclusion we sense again the attempt of P, frequently noted, to hold together the experience of God as grace and as demand or as transcendence and immanence. It is at the door of the tent of meeting, i.e., at the great altar (cf. vs. 4), that Yahweh will meet with Moses and with the children of Israel. In vs. 42b the phrase meet with you indicates a plural pronoun, second person. This might make it apply to the priests. However, the next phrase, to speak there to you, has a singular pronoun and must indicate Moses.

In vs. 43 the Hebrew of it shall be sanctified is problematic. The only possible antecedent of the subject is the door of the tent (vs. 42), not the tabernacle as such (KJV). The door in the context means the altar, however (cf. Exeg. on vs. 11). Consequently, the Vulg. rightly supplies that word. But the original Hebrew form is in doubt since the LXX, Syriac, and Targ. Onkelos agree in reading, "I shall be sanctified." We must either adopt that form or with Quell (Kittel, Biblia Hebraica, 3rd ed. ad loc.) drop the word altogether and read, "there will I meet with the children of Israel in my glory."

44. The consecration of tent and altar in this verse militates against supplying either tabernacle (KJV) or "altar" (Vulg.) in vs. 43.

45 ¶ And I will dwell among the children of Israel, and will be their God.

46 And they shall know that I am the LORD their God, that brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, that I may dwell among them: I am the LORD their God.

30 And thou shalt make an altar to burn incense upon: of shittim wood shalt thou make it.

2 A cubit shall be the length thereof, and a cubit the breadth thereof; foursquare shall it be: and two cubits shall be the height thereof: the horns thereof shall be of the same.

3 And thou shalt overlay it with pure gold, the top thereof, and the sides thereof round about, and the horns thereof; and thou shalt make unto it a crown of gold round about.

4 And two golden rings shalt thou make to it under the crown of it, by the two corners thereof, upon the two sides of it shalt thou make it; and they shall be for places for the staves to bear it withal.

5 And thou shalt make the staves of shittim wood, and overlay them with gold.

6 And thou shalt put it before the veil that is by the ark of the testimony, before will consecrate, to serve me as priests. 45 And I will dwell among the people of Israel, and will be their God. 46 And they shall know that I am the LORD their God, who brought them forth out of the land of Egypt that I might dwell among them; I am the LORD their God.

30 "You shall make an altar to burn incense upon; of acacia wood shall you make it. 2 A cubit shall be its length, and a cubit its breadth; it shall be square, and two cubits shall be its height; its horns shall be of one piece with it. 3 And you shall overlay it with pure gold, its top and its sides round about and its horns; and you shall make for it a molding of gold round about. 4 And two golden rings shall you make for it; under its molding on two opposite sides of it shall you make them, and they shall be holders for poles with which to carry it. 5 You shall make the poles of acacia wood, and overlay them with gold. 6 And you shall put it before the veil that 45-46. In the tabernacle, which is hallowed by his majestic presence, rather than in the tables of the law, Yahweh will dwell among the people of Israel. God's purpose in the Exodus is affirmed to have been the establishment of this relationship of grace which the program of sacrificial worship implies.

12. LATE ADDITIONS (30:1-38)

a) THE ALTAR OF INCENSE (30:1-10)

Like many other cultic forms, the use of incense and of an altar of incense was taken over from Canaanite religion. Albright (Archaeology of Palestine and the Bible, pp. 161-62) directs us to the hammānīm he discovered at Tell Beit Mirsim in Iron Age deposits from ca. 1200-900. He tends to the view that the incense altar was a feature of pre-exilic worship in the temple, but that it incurred the wrath of the prophets and was for a time eclipsed. It still seems probable, however, that the incense altar, as opposed to incense as such, was among the forms that were assimilated very late to the worship of Yahweh. The burning of incense proceeded for a long time without an altar of incense (Lev. 16:12; Num. 16:6-7), and it seems probable that the censers reposed on the table when not in use. The other evidences for the existence of the altar of incense are all very late (vs. 27; 31:8; 35:15; 37:25; 39:38; 40:5, 26; Lev. 4:7; Num. 4:16; I Macc. 4:49; Luke 1:11; Heb. 9:4; Josephus Jewish War V. 5. 5). An altar of incense was probably introduced in the second temple, after the main account of the tabernacle cultus was complete. Hence we find it in this late supplementary section. In vs. 1-5 the pattern of the altar—acacia wood with an overlay of pure gold, a molding of gold, golden rings for the poles of acacia wood—corresponds very closely to the pattern of the ark and the table (25:1-30).

30:6. The golden altar, as it was known in contrast to the bronze altar of burnt offering in the courtyard (38:30; 39:39), was set before the veil of the most holy place between the mercy seat that is over the testimony, where I will meet with thee.

7 And Aaron shall burn thereon sweet incense every morning: when he dresseth the lamps, he shall burn incense upon it.

8 And when Aaron lighteth the lamps at even, he shall burn incense upon it, a perpetual incense before the LORD throughout your generations.

9 Ye shall offer no strange incense thereon, nor burnt sacrifice, nor meat offering; neither shall ye pour drink offering thereon.

10 And Aaron shall make an atonement upon the horns of it once in a year with the blood of the sin offering of atonements; once in the year shall he make atonement upon it throughout your generations: it is most holy unto the LORD.

11 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

12 When thou takest the sum of the children of Israel after their number, then shall they give every man a ransom for his soul is by the ark of the testimony, before the mercy seat that is over the testimony, where I will meet with you. 7 And Aaron shall burn fragrant incense on it; every morning when he dresses the lamps he shall burn it, 8 and when Aaron sets up the lamps in the evening, he shall burn it, a perpetual incense before the LORD throughout your generations. 9 You shall offer no unholy incense thereon, nor burnt offering, nor cereal offering; and you shall pour no libation thereon. 10 Aaron shall make atonement upon its horns once a year; with the blood of the sin offering of atonement he shall make atonement for it once in the year throughout your generations; it is most holy to the LORD."

11 The LORD said to Moses, 12 "When you take the census of the people of Israel, the table and the lampstand (40:23-26). Because it stands before the mercy seat, Heb. 9:4 mistakenly assumed that it stood inside the most holy place.

7-9. The burning of incense, together with the care of the lamps, became a daily duty, morning and evening, of the priests in active service. This service was arranged on a rotational basis in the later temple.

10. On the great day of Atonement, as described in Lev. 16, the priest carried a censer of coals taken from the great altar and incense into the most holy place. But there is no reference to the altar of incense. From this we must perhaps conclude that the account in Lev. 16 antedates the introduction of the altar of incense.

b) THE POLL TAX (30:11-16)

At the opening of the Christian Era all adult male Jews paid an annual temple tax of half a shekel (Matt. 17:24-27). This was "the shekel of the sanctuary" (Lev. 27:25) or the "Phoenician shekel," whose value was greater than the Babylonian shekel (A. R. S. Kennedy, "Money," in Hastings, Dictionary of the Bible, III, 422). It weighed 112 grams. As an annual levy this tax seems to have been introduced very late. In Neh. 10:32 (Hebrew vs. 33) the community is reported to have resolved to pay one third of a shekel annually. On the ground that the Hebrew or Phoenician shekel was divided only into 30:11-16. Census Taking, Ancient and Modern.—Widespread throughout the human race is the conviction that it is unlucky to take the census, to count people.⁴ Even so late as 1753, fear was expressed by one member in the British House of Commons that the proposed census would be followed by "some great public misfortune or epidemical distemper," and in 1926 the authorities were afraid that there would be trouble with certain tribes in Kenya when the intention of taking a census became known. There is no doubt that certain people in all professions are "census-minded," e.g., superintendents of schools, denominational officials, etc. They delight in getting people to fill in forms, in publishing statistics, in reporting that so many thousand pieces of mail went out from their offices during the calendar year; their walls are adorned by framed graphs showing the variations in se-unto the LORD, when thou numberest them; that there be no plague among them, when thou numberest them.

⁴ See Frazer, Folk-lore in O.T., II, 555-63.

13 This they shall give, every one that passeth among them that are numbered, half a shekel after the shekel of the sanctuary: (a shekel is twenty gerahs:) a half shekel shall be the offering of the LORD.

14 Every one that passeth among them that are numbered, from twenty years old and above, shall give an offering unto the LORD.

15 The rich shall not give more, and the poor shall not give less, than half a shekel, when they give an offering unto the LORD, to make an atonement for your souls.

then each shall give a ransom for himself to the LORD when you number them, that there be no plague among them when you number them. 13 Each who is numbered in the census shall give this: half a shekel according to the shekel of the sanctuary (the shekel is twenty gerahs), half a shekel as an offering to the LORD. 14 Every one who is numbered in the census, from twenty years old and upward, shall give the LORD's offering. 15 The rich shall not give more, and the poor shall not give less, than the half shekel, when you give the LORD's offering halves and quarters, this is interpreted as having been the lighter Babylonian shekel (one third of a shekel weighing 56-58 grams), i.e., the tax which was standard in Jesus' day, and the amount of which is indicated in this instruction, was double the tax that Nehemiah established. In this passage, probably based on Num. 1:1-3, the tax is designated as a ransom to protect men from the wrath of God when a census is taken (Num. 26:1-3). It is to be used for the service of the tent of meeting (vs. 16). This account is an attempt by a late P editor to establish the view that the temple tax was indeed "the commandment of Moses the servant of the LORD (II Chr. 24:6).

11-12. At the census, which is a military act, each shall give a ransom [i.e., provide a "covering"] for himself. The mustering of Israel's power, implicit in a census, was felt to provoke Yahweh's jealousy, for he was Israel's strength.

13. The term shekel of the sanctuary is here a technical term (Lev. 27:25) referring to the Phoenician coinage which was the standard for the temple tax. The parenthetical note that the shekel is twenty gerahs (Lev. 27:25; Num. 3:47; 18:16; Ezek. 45:12) lected churches in the ratio of giving to home and foreign benevolences; they display maps with pins on them locating every home subscribing to the denominational paper; their chief delight is in issuing questionnaires asking for the exact number of hymnbooks in each church room during the year. Other people, regarded by these officials as superstitious, do not have much faith in continual counting. They instinctively fear the census in its many forms; they distrust organizations with large staffs of salaried officials, where the filing cabinet is the sacred shrine; they even feel that people should be stimulated to give freely rather than under the duress of the every member canvass; they talk about the log with Mark Hopkins at one end and the student at the other as the ideal college or church school; they suspect that most organizations exist chiefly for the benefit of the organization.

We shall always have these two types of people with us. The Lord's suggestion in these verses was that both sides should compromise. Let the counters count if they want to do it, but the other side should see to it that there are some good results besides the mere resultant statistics. In fact, conduct an every member canvass to get everyone to give to the church, but without undue pressure or salesmanship. For there is still something unlucky about organization applied to human affairs. Even the poll tax suggested here has proved in our day an instrument of racial discrimination, and churches are apt to count their membership and attendance to prove themselves better than other churches; Rev. 7:9 is true not only of the redeemed, but of all spiritual things, "which no man could number."

By seeing the crowds of men about him, by getting engaged in all sorts of worldly affairs, by becoming wise about how things go in this world, such a man forgets himself, forgets what his name is, does not dare to believe in himself, finds it a too venturesome thing to be himself, far easier and safer to be like others, to become a "me too," a number, a cipher in the crowd.⁵

⁵ Kierkegaard, quoted by T. S. Gregory, "Kierkegaard: the Prophet of Now," p. 717.

16 And thou shalt take the atonement money of the children of Israel, and shalt appoint it for the service of the tabernacle of the congregation; that it may be a memorial unto the children of Israel before the LORD, to make an atonement for your souls.

17 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

18 Thou shalt also make a laver of brass, and his foot also of brass, to wash withal: and thou shalt put it between the tabernacle of the congregation and the altar, and thou shalt put water therein.

19 For Aaron and his sons shall wash their hands and their feet thereat:

20 When they go into the tabernacle of the congregation, they shall wash with water, that they die not; or when they come near to the altar to minister, to burn offering made by fire unto the LORD:

21 So they shall wash their hands and their feet, that they die not: and it shall be a statute for ever to them, even to him and to his seed throughout their generations.

to make atonement for yourselves. 16 And you shall take the atonement money from the people of Israel, and shall appoint it for the service of the tent of meeting; that it may bring the people of Israel to remembrance before the LORD, so as to make atonement for yourselves."

17 The LORD said to Moses, 18 "You shall also make a laver of bronze, with its base of bronze, for washing. And you shall put it between the tent of meeting and the altar, and you shall put water in it, 19 with which Aaron and his sons shall wash their hands and their feet. 20 When they go into the tent of meeting, or when they come near the altar to minister, to burn an offering by fire to the LORD, they shall wash with water, lest they die. 21 They shall wash their hands and their feet, lest they die: it shall be a statute for ever to them, even to him and to his descendants throughout their generations."

represents an attempt at interpreting the temple coinage in terms of the Babylonian weights, the gerah being a Babylonian unit (cf. ibid.).

16. The tax, like the gems on the high priest's shoulderpiece and breastpiece, would bring the people of Israel to remembrance before the LORD. The Levites and priests, whose lives were dedicated to the temple, were not subject to the tax. By means of it those in secular pursuit were to make atonement.

c) THE BRASS LAVER (30:17-21)

In Solomon's temple stood a large circular tank, about forty-five feet in circumference, known as the "molten sea" (I Kings 7:23-26). It was all of brass and rested on twelve oxen. According to II Chr. 4:6, the "sea" was for the priestly ablutions. This late notice in P about the laver of bronze for the court of the tabernacle, reference to which had been omitted in the main body of the ordinances, bears no resemblance to the Solomonic precedents. In contrast to the other equipment few details are given. It had a base of bronze and was to stand between the tent of meeting and the altar (cf. I Kings 7:39). In 38:8 we are told that the women who served the tabernacle had provided their brass mirrors for its production. The writer's main concern seems to be to stress the importance

The methods of census decree that the workers in general must be liberated, even by means that make every worker a slave; that happiness can come by administration; that democracy works by numbers rather than by inner intellectual and moral responsibility. Think what might have been the condition of our world today if men had listened to Kierkegaard, rather than to the popular idealists, utilitarians, and optimists of his day!

17-21. Values in Ritual.—(Cf. 38:8.) The Exeg. points out how deeply the liturgical ablutions of Judaism have influenced Christianity. The Protestant Reformation was interested in supplanting most ritual observances by their spiritual counterparts. There was loss as well as gain in this attempt theoretically to spiritualize worship. The Protestant minister usually bows in silent prayer as he enters the sanctuary for a service; the people are sometimes urged on the

22 ¶ Moreover the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

23 Take thou also unto thee principal spices, of pure myrrh five hundred shekels, and of sweet cinnamon half so much, even two hundred and fifty shekels, and of sweet calamus two hundred and fifty shekels,

24 And of cassia five hundred shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary, and of oil olive a hin:

25 And thou shalt make it an oil of holy ointment, an ointment compound after the art of the apothecary: it shall be a holy anointing oil.

26 And thou shalt anoint the tabernacle of the congregation therewith, and the ark of the testimony,

22 Moreover, the LORD said to Moses, 23 "Take the finest spices: of liquid myrrh five hundred shekels, and of sweet-smelling cinnamon half as much, that is, two hundred and fifty, and of aromatic cane two hundred and fifty, 24 and of cassia five hundred, according to the shekel of the sanctuary, and of olive oil a hin; 25 and you shall make of these a sacred anointing oil blended as by the perfumer; a holy anointing oil it shall be. 26 And you shall anoint with it the tent of meeting and the ark of the testimony, of the daily ritual ablutions for the priests. They must wash with water, lest they die. It is an everlasting obligation (hōq, cf. 28:43). The liturgical ablutions of Judaism have deeply influenced both Islam and Christianity.

d) THE HOLY OIL (30:22-33)

Oil, usually mixed with spices or aromatic fluids, was commonly used for adornment and for healing in Israel and in all the ancient Near East. It also served religious or liturgical purposes from earliest times. It symbolized the consecration of persons—notably kings, prophets, and priests—to specific vocations. The hallowed character of sacred objects or persons, lost by sin or impurity, was restored by anointing. Thus, after the sin offering, the altar was anointed (29:36); and the healed leper, restored to the fellowship of Israel, was anointed (Lev. 14:14-17). A great supply of oil was customarily in store, partly because the best oils, properly stored, were believed to improve with age. Alabaster jars or boxes (Matt. 26:7) were considered ideal for this purpose (A. Macalister, "Ointment," in Hastings, Dictionary of the Bible, III, 593).

22-25. The finest spices were valued like gold. They constituted a suitable royal gift (I Kings 10:2, 10, 15). Liquid myrrh is now known as "Balsam of Mecca" (Driver, Exodus, p. 335), as distinguished from more solid and less fragrant balsams. The sweet-smelling cinammon probably came from the Far East and the aromatic cane from India. Cassia is related to the cinnamon bark and also came from the Far East. The quantities are to be weighed according to the shekel of the sanctuary, which was heavier than the usual commercial weight (cf. Exeg. on vs. 11-16). With the oil, which amounted to about one and one-half gallons, the total weight of the quantities in the recipe would be about a hundred pounds.

26-29. All the utensils were to be anointed for consecration, that they may be most holy. With less specific detail the instruction is repeated in 40:9-11. The actual anointing of the tabernacle is not reported in Exodus (cf. Num. 7:1), possibly because the cloud of Yahweh's presence is stressed as the real hallowing of the shrine (40:34-38).

church calendar to say a prayer as they enter their pews. But more definite results might be obtained by some ritual observance like that by which the priest washes his hands in water before celebrating the service or some similar rite in which the people participate as they enter the church. It is perhaps true that for most people the symbolic vividness of some such act might really bring home to everyone the need of cleansing oneself, body and soul, before entering on the worship of God. The original idea was not that one had to be unnaturally clean for such service. No, people's normal life ought to be a holy life, and the ablution was "to impart

27 And the table and all his vessels, and the candlestick and his vessels, and the altar of incense, 28 And the altar of burnt offering with all his vessels, and the laver and his foot.

29 And thou shalt sanctify them, that they may be most holy: whatsoever toucheth them shall be holy.

30 And thou shalt anoint Aaron and his sons, and consecrate them, that they may minister unto me in the priest's office.

31 And thou shalt speak unto the children of Israel, saying, This shall be a holy anointing oil unto me throughout your generations.

32 Upon man's flesh shall it not be poured, neither shall ye make any other like it, after the composition of it: it is holy, and it shall be holy unto you.

33 Whosoever compoundeth any like it, or whosoever putteth any of it upon a stranger, shall even be cut off from his people.

34 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Take unto thee sweet spices, stacte, and onycha, and galbanum; these sweet spices

27 and the table and all its utensils, and the lampstand and its utensils, and the altar of incense, 28 and the altar of burnt offering with all its utensils and the laver and its base; 29 you shall consecrate them, that they may be most holy; whatever touches them will become holy. 30 And you shall anoint Aaron and his sons, and consecrate them, that they may serve me as priests. 31 And you shall say to the people of Israel, "This shall be my holy anointing oil throughout your generations. 32 It shall not be poured upon the bodies of ordinary men, and you shall make no other like it in composition; it is holy, and it shall be holy to you. 33 Whoever compounds any like it or whoever puts any of it on an outsider shall be cut off from his people."

34 And the LORD said to Moses, "Take sweet spices, stacte, and onycha, and gal-

30. The anointing of Aaron and his sons must be compared with 29:7. Whereas in that instruction the chief concern is for the establishment of the priesthood, this verse is concerned with its perpetuation (cf. 40:15). Generation after generation, the descendants of the high priest shall inherit his office and be established in it by sacred anointing.

31-33. The priests themselves make the oil (cf. 31:11). To stress the holiness of God and of his service, the people are commanded not to duplicate the recipe of the sacred oil for secular purposes.

e) THE INCENSE RECIPE (30:34-38)

As in the case of oil, the use of incense in the cultus was an adaptation for religious ends of its great and valued role in social usage. The capacity of a cultic form, thus derived, to persist long after the social forms that started it off have disappeared is notably illustrated by the continued use of oil and incense in the Christian churches. While originally the smoke of incense may have symbolized the deity's assimilation of the gifts burned on the altar, it early becomes a figure of the prayers of the faithful (Ps. 141:2; Rev. 5:8; 8:3-4).

34. The Hebrew word for sweet spices seems to come from a Semitic root that means "to smell." Since an equal part of each of the four aromatic items is to be used, there are to one who has lost it the measure of sanctity that puts him on the level of ordinary social life."⁶

27-38. Frugance in Religion.—Pleasant-smelling perfumes are agreeable to men, and it was assumed also to God. Heaven, in later

⁶ W. Robertson Smith, Lectures on the Religion of the Semites (3rd ed.; London: A. & C. Black, 1927), p. 426.

Jewish writings, is a place of fragrance. The sense of smell is most potent in the remembrance of things past, in recalling to the mind scenes and situations of earlier days. The whiff of incense to the Roman Catholic at the Mass before the battle brings back to him the whole religious experience of his youth. Protestants have ignored or despised this fact. Too often the with pure frankincense: of each shall there be a like weight:

35 And thou shalt make it a perfume, a confection after the art of the apothecary, tempered together, pure and holy:

36 And thou shalt beat some of it very small, and put of it before the testimony, in the tabernacle of the congregation, where I will meet with thee: it shall be unto you most holy.

37 And as for the perfume which thou shalt make, ye shall not make to yourselves according to the composition thereof: it shall be unto thee holy for the LORD.

38 Whosoever shall make like unto that, to smell thereto, shall even be cut off from his people.

31 And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

2 See, I have called by name Bezaleel the son of Uri, the son of Hur, of the tribe of Judah:

banum, sweet spices with pure frankincense (of each shall there be an equal part), 35 and make an incense blended as by the perfumer, seasoned with salt, pure and holy; 36 and you shall beat some of it very small, and put part of it before the testimony in the tent of meeting where I shall meet with you; it shall be for you most holy. 37 And the incense which you shall make according to its composition, you shall not make for yourselves; it shall be for you holy to the LORD. 38 Whoever makes any like it to use as perfume shall be cut off from his people."

31 The LORD said to Moses, 2 "See, I have called by name Bez'alel the son of Uri, son of Hur, of the tribe of Judah:

no specific amounts given. Like its Hebrew counterpart, the term stacte, used in the LXX, means "that which drips." In the Hellenistic world it designated a type of myrrh oil. The term onycha also rests on the LXX form and refers to the "mouth" or flap of a mollusk found in the Red Sea. The term galbanum is taken directly from the Hebrew and indicates a resin now found chiefly in Iran. Frankincense also accompanied the meal offering (Lev. 2:1-2, 15-16) and was placed with the bread of the Presence on the table (Lev. 24:7). It was a prized perfume (Song of S. 3:6) and was made from a gum resin, whitish in color as the Hebrew shows, found in Somaliland and South Arabia. Its cultic employment is criticized by Jeremiah (6:20).

35. The word for incense means "odor" or "smoke." Salt also figures in the meal offering (cf. Lev. 2:13). It may symbolize the ancient conviction that the covenant between God and Israel had been sealed in a fellowship meal (24:9-11). In such a meal, as among Arabs today, salt was peculiarly the sign that fellowship was established (II Chr. 13:5).

36-37. The compound must probably be understood to have been stored in a dry form and in relatively large pieces. For use a small portion was pulverized and placed in the censer or on the altar of incense.

13. APPOINTMENT OF BEZALEL AND OHOLIAB (31:1-11)

In many respects this account, in which Yahweh instructs Moses to appoint Bezalel and Oholiab to make the tabernacle and its equipment, differs from its parallel in stuffy atmosphere of buildings closed all week recall his childhood church to the Protestant boy. But the tabernacle and the temple for the Jew were intertwined with memories of fragrance. The priest was anointed with sweet-smelling oil, and there was the incense. Incense was first of all a costly offering pleasing to God; then it was a way of uniting sacred experiences with pleasant memories in man's subconscious mind. It neutralized the smells of sacrifice and of crowds of men in hot climates. It was likewise a lovely symbol of prayer rising in fragrance to heaven (cf. Ps. 141:2; Rev. 5:8; 8:3-4; John 12:3; st. ii of the hymn "Jesus shall reign where'er the sun").

31:1-11. The Holiness of Beauty.—The best commentary on the words of vs. 6, "I have endowed the minds of all craftsmen with skill,"

3 And I have filled him with the spirit of God, in wisdom, and in understanding, and in knowledge, and in all manner of workmanship,

4 To devise cunning works, to work in gold, and in silver, and in brass,

5 And in cutting of stones, to set them, and in carving of timber, to work in all manner of workmanship.

6 And I, behold, I have given with him Aholiab, the son of Ahisamach, of the tribe of Dan; and in the hearts of all that are wise-hearted I have put wisdom, that they may make all that I have commanded thee;

7 The tabernacle of the congregation, and the ark of the testimony, and the mercy seat that is thereupon, and all the furniture of the tabernacle,

8 And the table and his furniture, and the pure candlestick with all his furniture, and the altar of incense,

9 And the altar of burnt offering with all his furniture, and the laver and his foot,

10 And the clothes of service, and the holy garments for Aaron the priest, and the garments of his sons, to minister in the priest's office,

3 and I have filled him with the Spirit of God, with ability and intelligence, with knowledge and all craftsmanship, 4 to devise artistic designs, to work in gold, silver, and bronze, 5 in cutting stones for setting, and in carving wood, for work in every craft. 6 And behold, I have appointed with him Oho'liab, the son of Ahis'amach, of the tribe of Dan; and I have given to all able men ability, that they may make all that I have commanded you: 7 the tent of meeting, and the ark of the testimony, and the mercy seat that is thereon, and all the furnishings of the tent, 8 the table and its utensils, and the pure lampstand with all its utensils, and the altar of incense, 9 and the altar of burnt offering with all its utensils, and the laver and its base, 10 and the finely worked garments, the holy garments for Aaron the priest and the garments of his 35:30-36:7. It itemizes the objects to be made, including the altar of incense (vs. 8) and the laver and its base (vs. 9), reference to which is of very late origin in the instructions (cf. ch. 30). There is here no reference to the other workers co-operating with the leaders, nor about the offerings made for the work. It seems most probable that the section stems from the same late editor as ch. 30 (PS). He may have used 35:30-36:7 as a source for composing his addition.

31:1-2. Bezelel is designated as of the tribe of Judah. In I Chr. 2:18-20 his genealogy is traced to Caleb. The Caleb clan, originally a separate unit (Judg 1:11-15, 20; I Sam. 30:14), was absorbed by Judah.

3. The Spirit of God is virtually synonymous here with the divine wisdom or skill (vs. 6; cf. 36:2) which expresses itself in a mastery of arts and crafts.

6. Oholiab is mentioned only in this context. The reason for his association with the tribe of Dan is unknown.

10. The LXX reads "liturgical garments" instead of finely worked garments. The Samar. has "garments of the service." The Hebrew has finely worked also in 35:19; 39:1, 41. In all three cases it is followed by the phrase for their service as priests. Some MSS add the same phrase here. The translation of the Hebrew word (שרר) as finely is in Ecclus. 38:24-34. Note especially the Revised Translation (1894) of the last verse:

But they will maintain the fabric of the world;
And in the handywork of their craft is their prayer.

See also "The Praise of Moses" (Ecclus. 45:1-5).

There is a lovely appreciation of craftsmen in Victoria Sackville-West's poem "The Land."

In one English church the end panel of each pew on the aisle was left of plain wood, to be carved by each pewholder according to his taste and ability. One of the high forms of worship 11 And the anointing oil, and sweet incense for the holy place: according to all that I have commanded thee shall they do.

12 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

13 Speak thou also unto the children of Israel, saying, Verily my sabbaths ye shall keep: for it is a sign between me and you throughout your generations; that ye may know that I am the LORD that doth sanctify you.

14 Ye shall keep the sabbath therefore; for it is holy unto you. Every one that defileth it shall surely be put to death: for whosoever doeth any work therein, that soul shall be cut off from among his people.

15 Six days may work be done; but in the seventh is the sabbath of rest, holy to the LORD: whosoever doeth any work in the sabbath day, he shall surely be put to death.

16 Wherefore the children of Israel shall keep the sabbath, to observe the sabbath throughout their generations, for a perpetual covenant.

sons, for their service as priests, 11 and the anointing oil and the fragrant incense for the holy place. According to all that I have commanded you shall do."

12 And the LORD said to Moses, 13 "Say to the people of Israel, 'You shall keep my sabbaths, for this is a sign between me and you throughout your generations, that you may know that I, the LORD, sanctify you. 14 You shall keep the sabbath, because it is holy for you; every one who profanes it shall be put to death; whoever does any work on it, that soul shall be cut off from among his people. 15 Six days shall work be done, but the seventh day is a sabbath of solemn rest, holy to the LORD; whoever does any work on the sabbath day shall be put to death. 16 Wherefore the people of Israel shall keep the sabbath, observing the sabbath throughout their generations, as a per-worked is achieved by treating it as synonymous with the Aramaic word (סררר) meaning plaited or braided work. Galling doubts that the garments of Aaron's sons could have been included in such a description (Beer, Exodus, p. 151). He prefers to derive the Hebrew term from a Babylonian word (šerdu) carrying the concept of agreement to perform. Thus he translates, "and the prescribed garments, even the sacred garments of Aaron."

14. THE SABBATH (31:12-17)

P's formulation of the sabbath law, both as to its source and function, appears here for the first time. It is absent from P's account of the Abrahamic covenant (Gen. 17), where circumcision is the chief sign. In Gen. 2:2-3 God consecrated the seventh day as a sign of his rule; here the seventh day becomes a sign and a commandment for Israel. For P it is rooted in the Creation and is a sign of the relationship of grace in which Israel stands to God, the sign of its election (cf. Ezek. 20:12). In 35:1-3 the law is reduced to a rule without any explanation and is primarily related to the tabernacle project.

12-13. All sabbaths are a part of the sabbath institution, which is a sign between the Lord and Israel.

16-17. The sabbath is a perpetual covenant, i.e., a sign of the relationship which is art. God enjoys perhaps most of all a gift of something our hands have made. It was thus that painting and sculpture and woodcarving and music were born "to the glory of God." One who strives to bring perfection to the slightest thing he sets his hand to lives in the great tradition of art and religion.

A servant with this clause
Makes drudgery divine;

Who sweeps a room, as for Thy laws,
Makes that and th' action fine.⁷

The artist is not a special kind of man, but every man is a special kind of artist. The magnificent temple of God wherein he shines in all his glory is intellect, and his gift to those who worship therein is skill.

12-17. Cf. Expos. on 16:22-30.

⁷ George Herbert, "The Elixir," st. v.

17 It is a sign between me and the children of Israel for ever: for in six days the LORD made heaven and earth, and on the seventh day he rested, and was refreshed.

18 ¶ And he gave unto Moses, when he had made an end of communing with him upon mount Sinai, two tables of testimony, tables of stone, written with the finger of God.

32 And when the people saw that Moses delayed to come down out of the mount, the people gathered themselves petual covenant. 17 It is a sign for ever between me and the people of Israel that in six days the LORD made heaven and earth, and on the seventh day he rested, and was refreshed.' "

18 And he gave to Moses, when he had made an end of speaking with him upon Mount Sinai, the two tables of the testimony, tables of stone, written with the finger of God.

32 When the people saw that Moses delayed to come down from the moun-Yahweh sets up (6:4) with Israel. This relationship is inherent in creation; it is a divine decree.

15. CONCLUSION (31:18)

The audience which began in 25:1 ends here. The gift of the tables of stone, written with the finger of God, reported here, probably comes from E and ties together 24:12-18 with ch. 32.

C. MOSES AND THE RESTORATION OF THE COVENANT (32:1-34:35)

As a literary structure these three chapters are a composite. Not only J and E, but also more than one editorial hand seem to have contributed to it. But despite this variety of sources and its piecemeal development, the section represents a dramatic whole. It

18. A Message from Heaven.—What proof was there that these tables were in God's handwriting? There are those who depend for this assurance on objective historic proof, just as handwriting experts are produced in courts of law today. But it is notorious that such experts often contradict one another in their testimony. They differ as to whether a letter was written by a particular person. How can we be sure that this particular statement was written by God?

There are some who profess to be able to pronounce authoritatively on this matter. Meister Eckhart dismisses all such with the statement that God has no individual style, "God's idiosyncrasy is being."⁸ A French writer puts it this way: "O Lord, it is not because I have been told that you were the Son of God that I listen to your word; but your word is beautiful beyond any human word, and that is how I recognize that you are the Son of God."⁹ We are saved by faith, not faith in inerrant documents, or in God's especially appointed experts on earth, but by faith in the truth, made clear by God's spirit in our own minds and hearts. Says Browning:

⁸ Pfeiffer, Meister Eckhart, I, 206; see also Ananda K. Coomaraswamy, The Transformation of Nature in Art (Cambridge: Harvard University Press, 1934), p. 86.

⁹ The Journals of André Gide, tr. Justin O'Brien (New York: Alfred A. Knopf, 1948), II, 170.

But here is the finger of God, a flash of the will that can, Existing behind all laws, that made them and, lo, they are!¹

This is a much more substantial rock on which to found one's faith. There is a democratic element in religion which depends on the general acceptance of truth by men of good will everywhere, as God breathed into man's nostrils the breath of life so that he partook of God's spirit and became a living soul (Gen. 2:7). All scripture is the purifier of that essential enlightened conscience and vision. Herbert Butterfield, professor of modern history in the University of Cambridge, says:

The conditions for a universal religion would not be satisfied by a religion which demanded that men should be experts in New Testament criticism—and capable of making up their minds where the highest experts differ—before they were in a state to make the essential choice between belief and unbelief.²

Edith Sichel says, "All the clergymen in the world cannot make one disbelieve in God,"³

¹ "Abt Vogler," st. vii.

² Christianity and History (London: G. Bell & Sons, 1949), p. 126.

³ New and Old (New York: E. P. Dutton & Co., 1918), p. 58.

together unto Aaron, and said unto him, Up, make us gods, which shall go before us; for as for this Moses, the man that brought tain, the people gathered themselves together to Aaron, and said to him, "Up, make us gods, who shall go before us; as for this deals with the relation of God's grace to his law in the covenant relationship in which Israel stands.

The covenant relationship was made possible by God's initial revelation in his act of deliverance. It is founded on grace. But the covenant demanded obedience of Israel. And the laws were the sign of this demand. What would happen to Israel's covenant relationship if Israel disobeyed? Is there forgiveness for apostates as well as redemption for slaves? Does God by grace restore those who have forfeited their covenant privilege? Can punishment and grace be correlatives? Given the fact of sin and disobedience, chs. 32-34 raise issues that are inescapable when chs. 1-15 and 19-24 are taken seriously. The covenant was broken when Israel denied Yahweh as King (32:1, 4, 8). The basic question is, Will Yahweh again lead a people who have once rejected his leadership (33:1-6)?

The answer seems to be that while Yahweh in a sense cannot lead the people again, he promises to be with Moses (33:12-16), who is the leader of the people. There is thus no explicit solution for the problem of the apostates and their forgiveness. The impasse is overcome by the exaltation of Moses. His faithfulness has an atoning value. Because of Moses, Israel will enjoy God's leadership even though the sin of apostasy is not canceled (32:34). In these chapters, as nowhere else, Moses is put in a class apart. He becomes a mediator who, because of what he is, effects a relationship between God and Israel which but for him could not have been restored. Moses is presented as a prophetic figure, perhaps modeled on the prophet Elijah. He is the angry iconoclast who pulverizes the idol and subjects his people to ordeal (32:20). His heroic zeal and anger make Aaron wither as a pathetic nonentity (32:21-24), and in the manner of Elijah he blesses the Levites for slaughtering all deviationists (32:25-29). But Moses is also the intercessor who loves his people more than himself. He is the priest whose prayers save Israel (32:11-14, 30-35). He is the unselfish servant without ambitions of his own, by whose devotion Israel is saved (33:12-16). Further, he is the divine companion, the intimate of Yahweh. Though he remains mortal and human, he has access to God as no other man has. In the restoration of the covenant Moses alone witnesses the theophany (34:3-10); in a sense it is restored with him, or in terms of his person. His own halo is the "sign" that seals the covenant (34:29-35). Thus in these chapters Moses becomes more than a prophet. He is the mediator of the covenant in the sense that what he is in faith and character makes the covenant possible. Israel can be restored to a relationship of grace only because of the perfect obedience of Moses.

1. THE GOLDEN CALF (32:1-35)

The calf was a molten image. Molten images were forbidden in Israel, both because it was wrong to represent God in any way and because they were associated with the which is a sly way of saying that you must take nobody's word, you must know God yourself. It was in this way that the children of Israel knew that these words graven on the stones were in the handwriting of God. We can see them reading as Moses held the tablets up before them—the fruit of all their experience and aspiration, of all their tenderest and deepest relationships with their fellows and with God—then bowing their heads and saying, "These indeed are the words of God!"

32:1-35. The Molten Calf.—The history of this tale must be long and is certainly obscure, but the underlying truth which has given it its longevity makes it impossible for any generation to forget it. The narrative as we have it dates from a later controversy about the validity of the use of images in the worship of Yahweh (see Exeg.). But the story itself is one of the classic tales of the human race. As Paul points out (I Cor. 10:7), and as is illustrated in Ps. 106:20 ff., it portrays three types of people: the mobsman, the politician, and the statesman: the man who so easily forgets the lovingkindness he has received and reverts to his evil ways; Aaron, the ecclesiastical politician, the apostle of the second us up out of the land of Egypt, we wot not what is become of him.	Moses, the man who brought us up out of the land of Egypt, we do not know what has cultus of the nature mysticism that was the prevalent religion of Canaan. The northern kingdom worshiped Yahweh under the form of two golden calves of this type. The adulteration of Israel's faith by Canaanite elements was certainly facilitated by this syncretistic adaptation. But it is not evident that any voice before Hosea spoke out against the practice. Not until the reformation of Josiah of Judah is it radically attacked. Even the puritan Elijah seems to have left the images at Bethel untouched. Therefore it has been generally felt that the story of the golden calf, as well as the prohibition of molten images, cannot date from a time earlier than the eighth century (cf. e.g., McNeile, Exodus, pp. 203-4). This story, it is thought, was set in the Mosaic era to throw the weight of tradition and of the great name of Moses to the support of the position of the reformers in the eighth and seventh centuries. Molten images, it is said, not only lacked attraction for the nomads Moses led, but were unknown to them. There can be no doubt that the story received its present form very much later than the Mosaic era and that it was developed and used for polemic purposes in the struggle of the Jerusalem priests against the Bethel shrine. But it would be difficult to demonstrate that Moses could not have been confronted with apostasy in this form. This is especially true if we take seriously the possibility that Israel borrowed heavily from such established shrine centers as Kadesh (cf. Beer, Exodus, pp. 155-56). Archaeological research has made it clear that even the most outlying oasis and settlement shared in the substance of the Canaanite fertility religion and its cultus. And further, however we may dispose of this particular illustration, the point it makes, that Moses taught that the covenant demanded faith in and loyalty to Yahweh alone, seems almost incontrovertible.

---	--

a) THE PEOPLE'S APOSTASY (32:1-6)

32:1. Aaron and the elders had been left in charge when Moses went up the mountain (24:14-18). They were to await his return. Aaron had no authority of his own; he was only a voice for Moses (4:15). The people do not ask for another god than Yahweh; they want Moses replaced as leader, for they do not know what has become of him. In his stead they want gods, who shall go before us. The charismatic leadership of the prophet is rejected in favor of what, it is hoped, will be a more stable representation of deity. The request has much in common with the people's request for a king (I Sam. 8:5). Unlike Samuel, Aaron does not consult Yahweh. He is ready to exchange charismatic leadership for more manageable forms (vss. 2-3). As in the case of the tabernacle (ch. 35), the materials for the cult are a gift of the people.

best, the feeble excuser of supine subservience to popular clamor; and Moses, the real leader of men with his white-hot indignation against sin and his tender intercession for sinners.

In The Pilgrim's Progress the pilgrims are welcomed by shepherds to the Delectable Mountains:

So they went forth with them, and walked a while, having a pleasant prospect on every side. . . . Then I saw in my dream that the shepherds had them to another place in a bottom, where was a door on the side of a hill. . . . The shepherds told them, "This is a byway to hell."⁴

So the Israelites discovered, after the delectable experience of their release from Egypt.

⁴ Part I, ch. viii.

The *Autobiography of William Allen White*⁵ gives one of the most vivid pictures of the Aaron politicians of his day in Kansas and the United States. In fact "The Worship of the Golden Calf" would be a fitting title for the history in many of his chapters.

It has been observed that God calls the Israelites thy people when angry with them (vs. 7). Moses seems to resent this and says in effect, "They are thy people too; thou didst bring them up out of Egypt. Yesterday they were slaves, and dost thou expect them to be heroes of the faith today?" They wanted a god whom they could see and had set up an image, perhaps meant to be one of Yahweh (vs. 5), like the images they had become accustomed to see in Egypt. But ⁵ New York: The Macmillan Co., 1946.

2 And Aaron said unto them, Break off the golden earrings, which are in the ears of your wives, of your sons, and of your daughters, and bring them unto me.

3 And all the people brake off the golden earrings which were in their ears, and brought them unto Aaron.

4 And he received them at their hand, and fashioned it with a graving tool, after he had made it a molten calf: and they said, These be thy gods, O Israel, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt.

5 And when Aaron saw it, he built an altar before it; and Aaron made proclamation, and said, To-morrow is a feast to the LORD.

6 And they rose up early on the morrow, and offered burnt offerings, and brought peace offerings; and the people sat down to eat and to drink, and rose up to play.

become of him." 2 And Aaron said to them, "Take off the rings of gold which are in the ears of your wives, your sons, and your daughters, and bring them to me." 3 So all the people took off the rings of gold which were in their ears, and brought them to Aaron. 4 And he received the gold at their hand, and fashioned it with a graving tool, and made a molten calf; and they said, "These are your gods, O Israel, who brought you up out of the land of Egypt!" 5 When Aaron saw this, he built an altar before it; and Aaron made proclamation and said, "Tomorrow shall be a feast to the LORD." 6 And they rose up early on the morrow, and offered burnt offerings and brought peace offerings; and the people sat down to eat and drink, and rose up to play.

4. The graving tool or stylus was probably used on the image after it had been cast. The word calf does not preclude the figure of a mature ox (Ps. 106:20). In all probability the figure was gold-plated. The people recognize in the image a representation of the gods who led them out of the land of Egypt. It may be that the use of the plural reflects a common concern with the polemics about the two bull images in Israel (I Kings 12:28).

5. Aaron proclaims a feast of dedication, a feast to the LORD. He builds an altar at which he officiates as priest. But it is an altar and a priesthood without the prophetic sanction of Moses. In later Israel the cultus claimed to be founded on the prophets.

6. The usual sacrifices of praise and of fellowship take place. Even in the Deuteronomic prescriptions worship is an occasion for feasting and "rejoicing" (Deut. 12:7, 18; 14:26; 16:11, 14). It is probable, however, that here some of the immoral practices that came with infiltrations from the Canaanite cultus are implied by the statement that the people rose up to play (cf. Num. 25:1-9; I Kings 14:24; Amos 2:7). Against these the Deuteronomic movement was directed.

Moses did not want to found a new dynasty, a new nation (vs. 10); he loved the people, and persuaded God to modify his wrath toward them. They were his children. They had been bad, but were they not little children? He was angry at what they had done, but sorry for them (Deut. 9:12-14). For Aaron's excuse see Phillips Brooks's sermon "The Fire and the Calf."⁶ It is a relief to see, as close study will reveal (see Exeg.), that vs. 25-29 were not a part of this story, but have been taken from the account of some other mass rebellion.

6. Feasting and Dancing.—This verse was the text of many a medieval sermon. Preachers were continually reminding their hearers that the first biblical account of dancing occurs in the story of the golden calf; and in the Book of Homilies, which was ordered to be read in the churches of England by the Convocation of 1542, "for stay of such errors as were then by ignorant preachers sparkled among the people," we find a comment on this message: "If the Israelites had not given themselves to belly-cheare, they had never so often fallen to idolatrie. Neyther would wee at this day be so addict to superstition were it not that wee so much esteemed the filling of our bellies."⁷ Yet such leaders of the church as Thomas Aquinas could not rule out dancing and feasting altogether, for they found them mentioned without reprobation in other passages in scripture; many of them therefore allowed the dance and the feast on very exceptional occasions, such as a national victory, the homecoming of a friend, or even sometimes at weddings.

⁶ Sermons Preached in English Churches (New York: E. P. Dutton & Co., 1883), pp. 43-64.

⁷ The Second Tome of Homilies, Homily VI, "Against Gluttony and Drunkenness."

7 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Go, get thee down; for thy people, which thou broughtest out of the land of Egypt, have corrupted themselves:

8 They have turned aside quickly out of the way which I commanded them: they have made them a molten calf, and have worshipped it, and have sacrificed thereunto, and said, These be thy gods, O Israel, which have brought thee up out of the land of Egypt.

9 And the LORD said unto Moses, I have seen this people, and, behold, it is a stiff-necked people:

10 Now therefore let me alone, that my wrath may wax hot against them, and that I may consume them: and I will make of thee a great nation.

11 And Moses besought the LORD his God, and said, LORD, why doth thy wrath wax hot against thy people, which thou hast brought forth out of the land of Egypt with great power, and with a mighty hand?

12 Wherefore should the Egyptians speak, and say, For mischief did he bring them out, to slay them in the mountains, and to consume them from the face of the earth? Turn from thy fierce wrath, and repent of this evil against thy people.

13 Remember Abraham, Isaac, and Israel, thy servants, to whom thou swarest by thine own self, and saidst unto them, I will multiply your seed as the stars of heaven, and all this land that I have spoken of will I give unto your seed, and they shall inherit it for ever.

14 And the LORD repented of the evil which he thought to do unto his people.

7 And the LORD said to Moses, "Go down, for your people, whom you brought up out of the land of Egypt, have corrupted themselves; 8 they have turned aside quickly out of the way which I commanded them; they have made for themselves a molten calf, and have worshipped it and sacrificed to it, and said, 'These are your gods, O Israel, who brought you up out of the land of Egypt!'" 9 And the LORD said to Moses, "I have seen this people, and behold, it is a stiff-necked people; 10 now therefore let me alone, that my wrath may burn hot against them and I may consume them; but of you I will make a great nation."

11 But Moses besought the LORD his God, and said, "O LORD, why does thy wrath burn hot against thy people, whom thou has brought forth out of the land of Egypt with great power and with a mighty hand? 12 Why should the Egyptians say, 'With evil intent did he bring them forth, to slay them in the mountains, and to consume them from the face of the earth?' Turn from thy fierce wrath, and repent of this evil against thy people. 13 Remember Abraham, Isaac, and Israel, thy servants, to whom thou didst swear by thine own self, and didst say to them, 'I will multiply your descendants as the stars of heaven, and all this land that I have promised I will give to your descendants, and they shall inherit it for ever.'" 14 And the LORD repented of the evil which he thought to do to his people.

b) MOSES' FIRST INTERCESSION (32:7-14)

7-10. The calf represents Yahweh to the people. But they have made [it] for themselves. It is their attempt to define the nature and way of Yahweh according to their own desires. This worship is a form of disobedience because it rests on an attempt to control deity. The wrath of God is stayed by the figure of Moses. Israel is here called his people (vs. 7). They are no longer God's people. The nobility of Moses as intercessor is stressed by the promise that if Moses would only let him destroy Israel, God would make a great nation of Moses himself.

11-14. Moses reminds God that he cannot deny his own people (cf. vs. 7). To destroy Israel would mean that God would undo what he has done (vs. 11). The meaning of what he has done would be obscured for the nations (vs. 12). It would mean going back on the oath to the fathers (Gen. 22:16), an oath backed by God's own character. The intercession assumes that God will be true to himself. Moses appeals to the rock of Israel's faith, the living God (Ps. 90).

15 ¶ And Moses turned, and went down from the mount, and the two tables of the testimony were in his hand: the tables were written on both their sides; on the one side and on the other were they written.

16 And the tables were the work of God, and the writing was the writing of God, graven upon the tables.

17 And when Joshua heard the noise of the people as they shouted, he said unto Moses, There is a noise of war in the camp.

18 And he said, It is not the voice of them that shout for mastery, neither is it the voice of them that cry for being overcome; but the noise of them that sing do I hear.

19 ¶ And it came to pass, as soon as he came nigh unto the camp, that he saw the calf, and the dancing: and Moses' anger waxed hot, and he cast the tables out of his hands, and brake them beneath the mount.

15 And Moses turned, and went down from the mountain with the two tables of the testimony in his hands, tables that were written on both sides; on the one side and on the other were they written. 16 And the tables were the work of God, and the writing was the writing of God, graven upon the tables. 17 When Joshua heard the noise of the people as they shouted, he said to Moses, "There is a noise of war in the camp." 18 But he said, "It is not the sound of shouting for victory, or the sound of the cry of defeat, but the sound of singing that I hear." 19 And as soon as he came near the camp and saw the calf and the dancing, Moses' anger burned hot, and he threw the tables out of his hands and broke

c) MOSES THE PROPHET (32:15-24)

Vss. 7-14 are not presupposed in this section. Moses leaves the mountain because the tables are ready. He seems unaware that anything is amiss. Not until he sees the calf (vs. 19) is he angry. Then he assumes the role of a zealous and violent prophet, comparable to Elijah.

15-16. The tables of the testimony are the stones with the laws. These inscribed laws bear witness to God's will. The phrase is typical of P (cf. 25:16). The stones, written on both sides, had been inscribed by God himself. This is a graphic metaphor to impress the conviction that the law is an expression of God's character. Yahweh is not just the sanction for the laws in a theocracy: the laws constitute his own decisions. God cut out the stones as well. They were the work of God (cf. 24:12). The second set were hewn by Moses, and also apparently inscribed by him (34:1, 4, 27-28).

17-18. Joshua had been nearest to Moses (24:13); he now rejoins him but plays no further role in the events that follow. The Hebrew word (anóth) translated shouting and cry is virtually repeated in the third clause (annóth) where it is translated singing. The LXX felt that it must have the same root meaning in this third clause as in the previous two and consequently translated it so by adding the word "wine," i.e., "a voice set off by [for] wine." The picture is that of the orgiastic type of worship associated with fertility cults.

19-20. Moses breaks the tablets as a sign that the covenant relationship no longer exists between Israel and God. Israel is apostate. Moses is the prophet of judgment who

16. The Language of Heaven.—There has been much controversy by the literalists as to what language the tables were written in. It is most plausible to believe that they were written in the language of heaven, the characteristic of which is that, when read, everyone of every language hears them in his own tongue. For God has a language of his own, and he who hears it knows it is the voice of God. Among men there has been only one who has ever spoken it perfectly, and he spoke it and wrote it not in words and sentences but in a life and in a death. He wrote no book. All that he said has merely been reported to us by those who faintly understood, but his life is a language that all nations and peoples can understand.

19. The Breaking of the Tablets.—In the Talmud there is the suggestion that this was not entirely an act of temper. God is threatening to destroy the whole people for disobedience, ac-

20 And he took the calf which they had made, and burnt it in the fire, and ground it to powder, and strewed it upon the water, and made the children of Israel drink of it.

21 And Moses said unto Aaron, What did this people unto thee, that thou hast brought so great a sin upon them?

22 And Aaron said, Let not the anger of my lord wax hot: thou knowest the people, that they are set on mischief.

23 For they said unto me, Make us gods, which shall go before us: for as for this Moses, the man that brought us up out of the land of Egypt, we wot not what is become of him.

24 And I said unto them, Whosoever hath any gold, let them break it off. So they gave it me: then I cast it into the fire, and there came out this calf.

25 ¶ And when Moses saw that the people were naked, (for Aaron had made them naked unto their shame among their enemies,) them at the foot of the mountain. 20 And he took the calf which they had made, and burnt it with fire, and ground it to powder, and scattered it upon the water, and made the people of Israel drink it.

21 And Moses said to Aaron, "What did this people do to you that you have brought a great sin upon them?" 22 And Aaron said, "Let not the anger of my lord burn hot; you know the people, that they are set on evil. 23 For they said to me, 'Make us gods, who shall go before us; as for this Moses, the man who brought us up out of the land of Egypt, we do not know what has become of him.' 24 And I said to them, 'Let any who have gold take it off'; so they gave it to me, and I threw it into the fire, and there came out this calf."

25 And when Moses saw that the people had broken loose (for Aaron had let them break loose, to their shame among their announces a "full end," more final than any of his successors in the eighth and seventh centuries. He destroys the image in a manner reminiscent of Josiah's reforms (II Kings 23:4, 6, 12, 15). To make the people drink the water containing the dust of the accursed idol was probably a trial by ordeal (Num. 5:16-22). Those who were guilty would be indicated by the evil effects that would follow. The soul-shattering experience of the prophets who pronounced doom upon the people for whom they also made intercession is nowhere more graphically set forth than in this account.

21-24. Moses holds Aaron responsible. He has brought a great sin upon them. Aaron calls Moses my lord (cf. Num. 11:28; 12:11). In the Hebrew text as it now stands his excuse is very lame; the people are "in evil" or set on evil. Aaron had merely acted as the barometer of public opinion. His role is the antithesis of the prophet's role, which is here exalted in the person of Moses. Aaron disowns responsibility even for the form of the idol: there came out this calf.

d) THE LEVITES (32:25-29)

This story of the punishment for the sin of apostasy also seeks to account for the origin of the Levitical priesthood. It was probably added to the account of the golden cording to the Torah. Moses pleads for them apparently in vain. At the end of his patience, he at last says to God: "You cannot slay these people on the basis of a law which they have not known about. It is true that the punishment of death for idolatry or the making of images is prescribed on these tablets, but I am just coming down the mount with these laws. The people have not as yet heard them read. That there may be no proof that such a law existed, Behold, I take upon me thy wrath, and I break them to pieces! Now, if thou dost exterminate them, thou dost act as a tyrant, condemning them to death for disobeying a law of which they were ignorant!" Rabbi Samuel bar Nahman illustrates it by the story of a man whose betrothed wife had been unfaithful to him, but he loved her and so tore up her marriage contract, for he said, "It will go easier with her if she faces the judges as a maiden than as a betrothed wife."⁸ It was a prayer of defiance against an outmoded idea of God, and has many parallels in history. It is poignantly expounded in The Green Pastures.¹

⁸ Quoted by Fleg, Moses, pp. 111-14.

¹ Part II, scenes 6, 8.

26 Then Moses stood in the gate of the camp, and said, Who is on the LORD's side? let him come unto me. And all the sons of Levi gathered themselves together unto him.

27 And he said unto them, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, Put every man his sword by his side, and go in and out from gate to gate throughout the camp, and slay every man his brother, and every man his companion, and every man his neighbor.

28 And the children of Levi did according to the word of Moses: and there fell of the people that day about three thousand men.

29 For Moses had said, Consecrate yourselves to-day to the LORD, even every man upon his son, and upon his brother; that he may bestow upon you a blessing this day.

30 ¶ And it came to pass on the morrow, that Moses said unto the people, Ye have sinned a great sin: and now I will go up unto the LORD; peradventure I shall make an atonement for your sin.

31 And Moses returned unto the LORD, and said, Oh, this people have sinned a great sin, and have made them gods of gold.

32 Yet now, if thou wilt forgive their sin — ; and if not, blot me, I pray thee, out of thy book which thou hast written.

enemies), 26 then Moses stood in the gate of the camp, and said, "Who is on the LORD's side? Come to me." And all the sons of Levi gathered themselves together to him. 27 And he said to them, "Thus says the LORD God of Israel, 'Put every man his sword on his side, and go to and fro from gate to gate throughout the camp, and slay every man his brother, and every man his companion, and every man his neighbor.'" 28 And the sons of Levi did according to the word of Moses; and there fell of the people that day about three thousand men. 29 And Moses said, "Today you have ordained yourselves for the service of the LORD, each one at the cost of his son and of his brother, that he may bestow a blessing upon you this day."

30 On the morrow Moses said to the people, "You have sinned a great sin. And now I will go up to the LORD; perhaps I can make atonement for your sin." 31 So Moses returned to the LORD and said, "Alas, this people have sinned a great sin; they have made for themselves gods of gold. 32 But now, if thou wilt forgive their sin — and if not, blot me, I pray thee, out of thy book calf from another source. As an etiological story it has a parallel in the account of the establishment of the priesthood of Aaron by the zeal of Phinehas (Num. 25:7-13). The Levites elsewhere were held to owe their status by virtue of being the dedicated substitutes for the redeemed first-born (Num. 3:44-46; 8:5-19).

† Gk Vg See Tg: Heb ordain yourselves

25-27. Moses challenges those loyal to Yahweh to kill the apostate brethren. He institutes a purge.

28-29. The Levites obey Moses and kill about three thousand Israelites. The term ordained yourselves is literally translated, "filled your [two] hands." It is used almost without exception of the consecration of priests (cf. Judg. 17:5, 12; I Kings 13:33). The Levites are not consecrated by other priests through the offering of sacrifices; they have consecrated themselves because for the name of Yahweh, in obedience to Moses, they have slain their sons and brothers (cf. Matt. 10:37).

e) MOSES' SECOND INTERCESSION (32:30-35)

30. The occasion on the morrow seems to follow Moses' descent from the mountain on the previous day. The punishment of the people by the Levitical massacre (vss. 25-29) cannot be presupposed. Moses will go up to the LORD as the great priest-intercessor to see if he can make atonement. The account exalts Moses.

31-32. The atonement Moses offers is his own faithfulness (cf., however, vss. 7-14, where he pleads God's character). If Israel cannot be forgiven, Moses himself wants to die: blot me . . . out of thy book. The book in the O.T. is the list of those who live on 33 And the LORD said unto Moses, Whosoever hath sinned against me, him will I blot out of my book.

34 Therefore now go, lead the people unto the place of which I have spoken unto thee: behold, mine Angel shall go before thee: nevertheless, in the day when I visit, I will visit their sin upon them.

35 And the LORD plagued the people, because they made the calf, which Aaron made.

33 And the LORD said unto Moses, Depart, and go up hence, thou and the people which thou hast brought up out of the land of Egypt, unto the land which I swore unto Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob, saying, Unto thy seed will I give it:

which thou hast written." 33 But the LORD said to Moses, "Whoever has sinned against me, him will I blot out of my book. 34 But now go, lead the people to the place of which I have spoken to you; behold, my angel shall go before you. Nevertheless, in the day when I visit, I will visit their sin upon them."

35 And the LORD sent a plague upon the people, because they made the calf which Aaron made.

33 The LORD said to Moses, "Depart, go up hence, you and the people whom you have brought up out of the land of Egypt, to the land of which I swore to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, saying, 'To earth (Isa. 4:3; Mal. 3:16; Ps. 69:28). Sinners die young; the righteous live out the full span of life.

33-34. Moses' desire to die unless his people could be forgiven is both noble and tragic. The tragedy consists in his inability to provide what he most desires. He must live with the tragedy. He must continue to obey: go, lead the people. The day of visitation, however, will always be the prophetic day of judgment. There are no indulgences. The outcome of this tragedy is not provided simply by the discovery that in Yahweh justice and love are held together (as in Isa. 40-55); the deliverance from the tragedy depends upon the insight that the fulfillment of God's purpose transcends history. Prophetism must be followed by apocalypticism and the N.T.

35. This verse hardly follows from the preceding one. It may originally have followed vs. 20.

2. THE PROMISE OF GOD'S PRESENCE (33:1-23; 34:5b-9)

Though ch. 33 stands in its present position and seems to be a part of the general context, it is best to study it on the assumption that it was once a unit with a concern of its own. The incident of the golden calf is not a specific concern here, though it has a general relevance to the problem of God's presence with a sinful people. The scene is the imminent departure from Sinai (cf. Num. 10-11). Moses seeks assurance from God that he will indeed be present with him in his task of leadership after God has told him that he will not go up among them (vs. 3). The tent (vss. 7-11), a separable unit, must be understood as the means of God's presence. In a theophany Moses is given proof of God's promise (vss. 18-23).

a) DEPARTURE FROM SINAI (33:1-6)

33:1, 3. Chronologically this command to leave Sinai belongs at the conclusion of the promulgation of all the laws. Israel must leave for the land of which I swore. The 33:1-23. Moses' Persistence with God.—The argument between Yahweh and Moses may be likened to that with Abraham (Gen. 18:22-23). The more Moses gets from God, the more he is emboldened to ask, but he does not cease his wrestling with God till, unlike Abraham, he has obtained God's highest blessing. It is probably meant that the persistence of Moses in petition and argument was due to his initial misunderstanding of God's first reply (vs. 17); as such it is a perfect picture of much of our praying, coming to a climax in vs. 14. We should all take to heart the fact that persistence in prayer is emphasized so much both in the O.T. and the N.T.; "Because of his importunity" (Luke 11:8). This passage in Exodus makes it clear that the persistence is necessary not for the purpose of persuading God, but in order that in

2 And I will send an Angel before thee; and I will drive out the Canaanite, the Amorite, and the Hittite, and the Perizzite, the Hivite, and the Jebusite:

3 Unto a land flowing with milk and honey: for I will not go up in the midst of thee; for thou art a stiffnecked people: lest I consume thee in the way.

4 ¶ And when the people heard these evil tidings, they mourned: and no man did put on him his ornaments.

5 For the LORD had said unto Moses, Say unto the children of Israel, Ye are a stiff-necked people: I will come up into the midst of thee in a moment, and consume thee: therefore now put off thy ornaments from thee, that I may know what to do unto thee.

6 And the children of Israel stripped themselves of their ornaments by the mount Horeb.

7 And Moses took the tabernacle, and pitched it without the camp, afar off from the camp, and called it the Tabernacle of your descendants I will give it.' 2 And I will send an angel before you, and I will drive out the Canaanites, the Amorites, the Hittites, the Per'izzites, the Hivites, and the Jeb'usites. 3 Go up to a land flowing with milk and honey; but I will not go up among you, lest I consume you in the way, for you are a stiff-necked people."

4 When the people heard these evil tidings, they mourned; and no man put on his ornaments. 5 For the LORD had said to Moses, "Say to the people of Israel, 'You are a stiff-necked people; if for a single moment I should go up among you, I would consume you. So now put off your ornaments from you, that I may know what to do with you.'" 6 Therefore the people of Israel stripped themselves of their ornaments, from Mount Horeb onward.

7 Now Moses used to take the tent and oath of God's promise still stands (32:13). God will not be immediately present with Israel as he has been at Sinai; he will not go up among them. His holiness prevents his unveiled presence. It would consume the people. This is doubly true: Israel is a stiff-necked people, rebellious as well as mortal.

2. This verse interrupts the continuity of vs. 1, 3. God says I will send an angel (LXX, "my angel") before he has been asked if or whom he will send. And in vs. 12 Moses says that God has not yet told whom he will send. The stock reference to the nations (cf. 3:8, 17; 34:11; etc.) also stamps it as an interpolation.

4-6. The Israelites mourned at the evil tidings that God would not personally accompany them. That this was for their own safety did not lessen the sorrow. Rather, it showed the tragedy of their situation. That no man put on his ornaments was not a sign of mourning but compliance with God's command by Moses (vs. 5). In 32:3-4 the people at the command of Aaron, not sanctioned by God or Moses his prophet, brought their trinkets for the manufacture of an illegitimate representation of deity. Here they are asked to bring the same sort of items for the construction of a legitimate instrument of the Presence (cf. 25:2-8; 35:20-29).

b) THE TENT (33:7-11)

7. The tent is the 'ohel mō'ēdh, the tent of meeting, in contrast to the tabernacle (mishkān), from which the KJV fails to distinguish it. It is Moses' tent. He alone used to take . . . and pitch it. The LXX calls it "his tent." The Hebrew text says that he the operation of prayer the petitioner's mind and imagination may be prepared for the answer already granted. As William Law says, "The Spirit of Prayer . . . is the Opener of all that is good within us, and the Receiver of all that is good without us." 2 The problem of prayer is not to get God to answer our prayers, but to adjust ourselves to receive the answer. The Gulf Stream will flow through a straw if it is turned in the direction of that tremendous current.

² The Spirit of Prayer, Part II, Dialogue 3, p. 116.

7-10. The Holy Place of Prayer.—These verses are a fragment of some very old record which the congregation. And it came to pass, that every one which sought the LORD went out unto the tabernacle of the congregation, which was without the camp.

8 And it came to pass, when Moses went out unto the tabernacle, that all the people rose up, and stood every man at his tent door, and looked after Moses, until he was gone into the tabernacle.

9 And it came to pass, as Moses entered into the tabernacle, the cloudy pillar descended, and stood at the door of the tabernacle, and the LORD talked with Moses.

10 And all the people saw the cloudy pillar stand at the tabernacle door: and all the people rose up and worshipped, every man in his tent door.

pitch it outside the camp, far off from the camp; and he called it the tent of meeting. And every one who sought the LORD would go out to the tent of meeting, which was outside the camp. 8 Whenever Moses went out to the tent, all the people rose up, and every man stood at his tent door, and looked after Moses, until he had gone into the tent. 9 When Moses entered the tent, the pillar of cloud would descend and stand at the door of the tent, and the LORD would speak with Moses. 10 And when all the people saw the pillar of cloud standing at the door of the tent, all the people would rise up and worship, every man at his tent door.

pitched the tent "for [to] him," i.e., for God. All accounts of the tent exalt Moses. Only for him was it a tent of revelation, the place at which God met him (cf. Num. 11:16-17, 24-30; 12:1-8; Deut. 31:14-15). As opposed to the ark, which stresses the nearness or presence of Yahweh (cf. Num. 10:35-36), the tent stresses God's separation from his people. It is a reminder that God is not among his people (vs. 3). The ark was pre-eminently the symbol of the priests. It is striking that the tent provides no role for the priest, not even Aaron. It seems to stand as the symbol of the most exalted form of prophecy (Num. 11:24-12:8). It is the tent of Moses, the prophet without fear.

But all who sought the LORD would go out to the tent of meeting, i.e., ordinary judgment, whether by oath or by lot, was given at the tent. It was for this purpose perhaps that Joshua was constantly in the tent (vs. 11). This constitutes an entirely different function, a function that does not presuppose the Presence, symbolized by the cloud, which Moses' entrance into the tent produced. It leads to the supposition that the ark may have stood inside the tent, though this must not obscure the point that the tent was an instrument in its own right, Moses' tent of revelation. The fact that the tent is called the "tent of the testimony" (Num. 9:15; 17:7-8 [Hebrew vs. 22-23]) lends support to the view that it also housed the ark. Eichrodt (Theologie des A.T., I, 45-46) has made the point that the tabernacle tradition of P, which seeks to absorb the tradition of the tent, serves to establish an ineradicable connection between tent and ark despite the tension involved in the religious meanings they set forth.

8. Since every man . . . at his tent door could see Moses enter the tent, Beer (Exodus, p. 159), following Gressmann, discounts the statement that the tent was outside the camp. Only if the tent, like the tabernacle, were in the center of the camp, he says, could it be seen by all. But Num. 11:24-30 speaks strongly against this view. Since the tent was in all probability pitched on a high place above the camp, the objection Beer makes seems unnecessary.

9. The Hebrew says that "he spoke" with Moses, for the pillar of cloud is here a synonym for the Lord.

has drifted into this context. It refers to a time before the "tabernacle" was erected. At that time there was a smaller tent which Moses and Joshua could carry; it was pitched outside the camp; it was used only by Moses and was cared for in his absence by Joshua. It is a fitting picture of the personal devotional life of the minister. There is a story of the white flag which flew at times over the tent of General Gordon in the desert and was the sign that he was not to be disturbed, that he was in prayer. The scene in which every man stood at the door of his tent and looked after Moses, saw the pillar of cloud descend, and worshiped, ought to be the scene

11 And the LORD spake unto Moses face to face, as a man speaketh unto his friend. And he turned again into the camp; but his servant Joshua, the son of Nun, a young man, departed not out of the tabernacle.

12 ¶ And Moses said unto the LORD, See, thou sayest unto me, Bring up this people: and thou hast not let me know whom thou wilt send with me. Yet thou hast said, I know thee by name, and thou hast also found grace in my sight.

13 Now therefore, I pray thee, if I have found grace in thy sight, show me now thy way, that I may know thee, that I may find grace in thy sight: and consider that this nation is thy people.

11 Thus the LORD used to speak to Moses face to face, as a man speaks to his friend. When Moses turned again into the camp, his servant Joshua the son of Nun, a young man, did not depart from the tent.

12 Moses said to the LORD, "See, thou sayest to me, 'Bring up this people'; but thou hast not let me know whom thou wilt send with me. Yet thou hast said, 'I know you by name, and you have also found favor in my sight.' 13 Now therefore, I pray thee, if I have found favor in thy sight, show me now thy ways, that I may know thee and find favor in thy sight. Consider too that

11. Moses was the greatest of the prophets. God was in the habit (used to) of speaking to him as a man speaks to his friend (cf. Num. 12:7-8). The counterweight to these statements is provided by vss. 18-23. These do not contradict vs. 11 but underscore the cleft between Creator and creature which exists even in the case of a Moses, who is "faithful in all my house" (Num. 12:7; cf. Heb. 3:2, 5) "as a servant."

c) GOD REVEALS HIMSELF TO MOSES (33:12-23; 34:5b-9)

The renewal of the covenant relationship with Israel, symbolized by the new tables of stone (34:1) is made possible by the faith of Moses and is preceded by a theophany made to him alone. In this theophany God, by means of a revelation of his character (34:5b-9), pledges Moses his presence in the task of leadership. The account of the revelation has become separated from the account of the theophany by 34:1-5a, which serves to introduce the promulgation of the code beginning at 34:10. Aside from this intrusion, it is difficult to see a progressive order in the text as it now stands. Thus, vs. 12 presupposed vs. 17. But when vs. 17 is placed before vs. 12 it is difficult to find a situation to which it is God's response (McNeile, Exodus, p. 210, devised a solution as follows: Num. 11:11-12, 14-15; Exod. 33:17, 12-13, 18-23; 34:8-9; 33:14-16. But Num. 11:11-12, 14-15 do not seem to present a request to which vs. 17 could be a reply. The transposition of vss. 14-16 after 34:9 seems sound). It is impossible to account satisfactorily for vs. 12b.

12. The scene is still Sinai, despite vss. 7-11. The situation is that created by God who, in his wrath, commanded the people to go up to possess Palestine even though he would not go up among them. Moses asks God what this means, Thou hast not let me know whom thou wilt send with me. He is stunned. He simply cannot understand Yahweh's purpose. Surely God will not forsake Moses or his people.

13. Moses retains his faith but seeks knowledge: Show me now thy ways. The LXX reads, "Show me thyself" (cf. vss. 18, 20). Consider too that this nation is thy people.

at every morning service: the minister at his prayers suggesting to the congregation to do likewise.

11. The Friend of God.—Thomas Aquinas uses this passage as an example of the necessity to guard against gross literalism, saying, "When Scripture states that He spoke to him face to face, this is to be understood as expressing the opinion of the people, who thought that Moses was speaking with God, mouth to mouth."³ But it is a picture of a spiritual communion. The relationship between God and man in prayer is here one of close friendship; in Ps. 123:2 it is pictured as that of master and servant (cf. Neh. 1:5-6); in Jer. 3:19 the relationship is one of father to children. Sometimes several such ³ Summa Theologica, Part II, Second Part, Q. XCVIII, art. 3. See also Pfeiffer, Meister Eckhart, I, 447.

14 And he said, My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest.

15 And he said unto him, If thy presence go not with me, carry us not up hence.

16 For wherein shall it be known here that I and thy people have found grace in thy sight? is it not in that thou goest with us? So shall we be separated, I and thy people, from all the people that are upon the face of the earth.

17 And the LORD said unto Moses, I will do this thing also that thou hast spoken: for thou hast found grace in my sight, and I know thee by name.

18 And he said, I beseech thee, show me thy glory.

this nation is thy people." 14 And he said, "My presence will go with you, and I will give you rest." 15 And he said to him, "If thy presence will not go with me, do not carry us up from here. 16 For how shall it be known that I have found favor in thy sight, I and thy people? Is it not in thy going with us, so that we are distinct, I and thy people, from all other people that are upon the face of the earth?"

17 And the LORD said to Moses, "This very thing that you have spoken I will do; for you have found favor in my sight, and I know you by name." 18 Moses said, "I

In the expected clarification he wants God to show what this means in the light of the disturbing command in vs. 1, 3. Moses' request for revelation is at the same time an intercession that God may assure them of his continued protection.

14-16. These verses should probably follow 34:9 (cf. ibid.). They accede to the request (34:9) that God go in the midst. My presence will go with you. Thus Moses' intercession has warded off God's threat in 33:1, 3. The Hebrew for presence is "face." It means that the fullness of God in his function as protector and leader will continue to be Israel's strength and safety. The judgment in which God "turns away his face" is removed. Only when Israel enjoys God's presence can it be a visible illustration of God's grace: only thus shall it be known that I have found favor in thy sight, I and thy people. Judgment is, after all, only the negative side of revelation!

17. The very thing God will do, Moses had asked for in vs. 13; God's declaration of his ways. I know you by name is a synonym for thou hast found grace in my sight. Moses' sincerity and faith move God to grant his request.

18. Moses is delighted. Show me thy glory, he says to God. The glory of God is the manifestation of God's character in its fullness. Moses wants God to disclose himself completely. Thus there is in Moses a poignant eagerness; he is entirely pure of heart, but he wants to know more than man can ever know (cf. vs. 21).

relationships are united, as in Mal. 1:6. All the prayers of Jesus begin with "Father" (except the cry of agony on the cross, "My God"). This was so characteristic of Jesus' way, and made such an impression on the Greek authors of the Gospels that they, recalling his very word, use the Aramaic Abba. In that word we feel that we are really listening to one who heard Jesus pray and remembered the sound of his voice.

15. Nowhere Without God.—"Moses was rather for dying where he stood, than to go one step without his God," so Christian comments in The Pilgrim's Progress.⁴ Indeed, both parts of that tale have this text as their theme. God goes with anyone, even the weakest and most afraid, who will take him for guide. The children asked when they would be "at an end of this doleful place," the Valley of the Shadow of Death, and Mr. Great-heart's answer was for them to "be of good courage and look well to their feet." The essentials of the story can be recalled: Christiana espied in front of them a thing of such a shape as she had never beheld before. Mr. Great-heart directed those who were afraid, to keep close to him. The fiend came on, "but when it was just come to him, it vanished to all their sights." In the ditch lay one Heedless, all rent and torn, a warning "not to set out lightly on pilgrimage, and to come without a guide." Mercy then, "looking behind her, saw, as she thought, something most like a lion, and it came a great padding pace after," and roared so loud that the valley echoed, and all their hearts, save the heart of their guide, did ache. But when Mr. Great-heart addressed himself to give him battle, it drew back and went no farther. And Christiana said, "Many have ⁴ Part I, ch. ix.

19 And he said, I will make all my goodness pass before thee, and I will proclaim the name of the LORD before thee; and will be gracious to whom I will be gracious, and will show mercy on whom I will show mercy.

20 And he said, Thou canst not see my face: for there shall no man see me, and live.

21 And the LORD said, Behold, there is a place by me, and thou shalt stand upon a rock:

22 And it shall come to pass, while my glory passeth by, that I will put thee in a cleft of the rock, and will cover thee with my hand while I pass by:

23 And I will take away mine hand, and thou shalt see my back parts; but my face shall not be seen.

pray thee, show me thy glory." 19 And he said, "I will make all my goodness pass before you, and will proclaim before you my name 'The LORD'; and I will be gracious to whom I will be gracious, and will show mercy on whom I will show mercy. 20 But," he said, "you cannot see my face; for man shall not see me and live." 21 And the LORD said, "Behold, there is a place by me where you shall stand upon the rock; 22 and while my glory passes by I will put you in a cleft of the rock, and I will cover you with my hand until I have passed by; 23 then I will take away my hand, and you shall see my back; but my face shall not be seen."

19. God accedes to Moses' request. He will let all his goodness pass before him. The LXX reads "my glory." God's anger is past. Israel's sin is forgiven. God's revelation will proclaim that he is as free in graciousness and mercy as in judgment. This new aspect of the name as reconciliation God promises to disclose (cf. Rom. 9:15-16).

20. But though a new dimension of God, my goodness in forgiveness, will be revealed, the face of God, his very being, cannot be disclosed in the glory that is manifest: Thou canst not see my face (cf. 24:10).

21-23. Moses is to see the glory as it passes by. But God's face shall not be seen. The poetic character of the bold anthropomorphism is evident from the statement that there is a place beside God where Moses shall stand while God passes by. Moses will see God's glory but not his face; he can know his will but not plumb his mystery.

34:5b. The revelation God promised Moses in 33:19 now actually begins. God stood with him there (cf. 33:21) and proclaimed the name (cf. 33:19). This verse is in part the conclusion of 34:1-4 and in part an editorial "bridge" from 33:23 to 34:6.

6-7. The LORD passed before him: Cf. 33:22; Moses stands in a cleft of the rock as God commanded. The revelation, as anticipated (33:19), declares God's character. The emphasis is upon his power to forgive. God is gracious, true, and merciful; full of goodness and lovingkindness. But, supremely, he forgives iniquity and transgression and sin. The Deuteronomic outlook pervades the passage (cf. 20:5; Num. 14:18; Deut. 5:9).

spoke of it, but none can tell what the Valley of the Shadow of Death should mean, until they come to it themselves." But how God took care of them all! Mr Ready-to-halt at the brink of the last river cried, "Now I shall have no more need of these crutches," and threw them away; Much-afraid "went through the river singing, but none could understand what she said"; there was hope for all Bunyan's neighbors, even the meanest, who would take God for guide, perhaps also in the end for the one of whom he says least, "a young woman, her name was Dull."⁵ Bunyan's sympathetic understanding of all kinds of people is filled with his assurance that this prayer is answered abundantly for them all.

⁵ Part II, chs. iii, vi-ix.

22. The Cleft of the Rock.—This is the scriptural basis for the famous hymn, "Rock of Ages, cleft for me." In Exodus the cleft protects one from the overwhelming glory of God, too dazzling for human eyes. It has been used in the Fathers as a symbol of the Incarnation, in which man saw as much of the divine being as was intelligible by him and practical for him to live by, God in man.

23. The Revelation and the Mystery.—A salutary admonition to all dogmatic souls who 34 And the LORD said unto Moses, Hew thee two tables of stone like unto the first; and I will write upon these tables the words that were in the first tables, which thou brakest.

34 The LORD said to Moses, "Cut two tables of stone like the first; and I will write upon the tables the words that were on the first tables, which you broke.

8-9. Moses prostrates himself. He addresses God as "Adonai," not as Yahweh. This heightens the emphasis upon God's holiness and transcendence. Moses, knowing now that God forgives, asks for a reversal of God's expressed intention in 33:1, 3: I pray thee, go in the midst of us. The request is granted (cf. 33:14-16).

3. THE RENEWAL OF THE COVENANT (34:1-5a, 10-35)

The heart of this chapter is the so-called "ritual decalogue" (vss. 14-26). As it now stands it is integral to the main concerns of chs. 32-33: the religious significance of the person of Moses and the doctrine of forgiveness of sins. It presupposes 32:1, 4. The duplication of the tables of the law, following sin, ostensibly embodied in this chapter, is already cited in Deut. 10:1-5. Nevertheless, these laws have a history prior to their integration in chs. 32-34 as an illustration of God's restoration in forgiveness.

The laws are related to and must be compared with the cultic sections of the Covenant Code (20:21-26; 22:18-23:19), not with the Decalogue. Most of the provisions are parallel to those of 23:13-19 (cf. 34:14-26). Practically all of the others are virtually duplicated in various places of the larger code (34:17=20:23; 34:19-20=22:29-30; 34:21=23:12). The Covenant Code is included in the E document; the "ritual decalogue" in J. On all of this there is considerable agreement. The literary-historical question under dispute is whether the Covenant Code, in its cultic sections, has borrowed from 34:14-26, or whether 34:14-26 is what was left of J's version of the Covenant Code after E's version was incorporated in the JE history. The former view is held, among others, by R. H. Pfeiffer (Introduction to the Old Testament [New York: Harper & Bros., 1941], pp. 220-21). He considers the "ritual decalogue" an actual (Deuteronomic) edition of an ancient Canaanite code antedating 1200. The Covenant Code is also an edition of this code, he says, even earlier. But it is one in which the text of the original Canaanite code is badly disarranged. Hence 34:14-26 becomes the primary resource in the Bible for the recovery of Israel's early religious history, or even of its early social and political history (cf. H. H. Rowley, The Re-discovery of the Old Testament [Philadelphia: Westminster Press, 1946], pp. 120-21). However, some share the view of Eichrodt (Theologie des A.T., I, 25) that 34:14-26 is only a "wreck" of J's version of Israel's laws, which was originally would discourse upon the "Mind of God." The radio broadcasting of sermons has mercilessly exposed the weakness of much preaching. For the first time the microphone in the pulpit is a sign to the preacher that he may be speaking to many not of his fold. Try to conceal them as he may, his unspoken dogmatic assumptions annoy those whose prejudices are different from his. The blare of the Kremlin from all dictator camps, or of some ecclesiastical authoritarianism, seems for the time being to drown out the humble, varied testimony of liberal minds who accept the others as brethren, yet refuse to admit that their voices are the pure voice of God. Even Moses can see God's glory but not his face (see Exeg.). The souls of the saints came up to stand in the presence of the Eternal. They were a little distant with each other, but each one laid his gift before the throne. God looked on each one and at his gift and smiled. At last came one magnificently dressed. As he approached the throne, he cleared all the other gifts away with his foot, and set his own in the center, saying, "This is the only one after thine own mind and law, O God." He smiled and was stepping back, but before he could reach his place again, the devil broke loose from hell and grabbed his gift and made off with it. And God rose from his throne, and, kneeling down, set all the other gifts in place again. When the givers saw this they shook hands, and some even kissed one another and wept. The giver of the rejected gift did likewise; and then, kneeling in astonished penitence, prayed, "Forgive me, for till now I had not seen thy face." And God laid his hand on him too, and said, "My son."

34:1-28. The Growing Revelation.—It is clear that there have been a number of editorial

2 And be ready in the morning, and come up in the morning unto mount Sinai, and present thyself there to me in the top of the mount.

3 And no man shall come up with thee, neither let any man be seen throughout all the mount; neither let the flocks nor herds feed before that mount.

4 ¶ And he hewed two tables of stone like unto the first; and Moses rose up early in the morning, and went up unto mount Sinai, as the LORD had commanded him, and took in his hand the two tables of stone.

5 And the LORD descended in the cloud, and stood with him there, and proclaimed the name of the LORD.

6 And the LORD passed by before him, and proclaimed, The LORD, The LORD God, merciful and gracious, long-suffering, and abundant in goodness and truth,

7 Keeping mercy for thousands, forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin, and

2 Be ready in the morning, and come up in the morning to Mount Sinai, and present yourself there to me on the top of the mountain. 3 No man shall come up with you, and let no man be seen throughout all the mountain; let no flocks or herds feed before that mountain." 4 So Moses cut two tables of stone like the first; and he rose early in the morning and went up on Mount Sinai, as the LORD had commanded him, and took in his hand two tables of stone. 5 And the LORD descended in the cloud and stood with him there, and proclaimed the name of the LORD. 6 The LORD passed before him, and proclaimed, "The LORD, the LORD, a God merciful and gracious, slow to anger, and abounding in steadfast love and faithfulness, 7 keeping steadfast love for thousands, forgiving iniquity and trans-

a parallel to E's. This version, like that of E, may have been an edition of earlier materials, even pre-Mosaic materials. But on the view that E's edition was preserved, the main resource in the Bible for the recovery of Israel's early religious history is not the "ritual decalogue" of 34:14-26, but the Covenant Code.

a) PREPARATION (34:1-5a, 10-11)

34:1-2. Moses is to take two tables of stone up the mount (cf. 24:12). The addition of like the first, perhaps of Deuteronomic origin (Deut. 10:1-5), relates the account to chs. 32-33 and makes it function as a renewal of the covenant. The theophany is confined to Moses and has been provided in 33:12-23. Moses is to present himself to God. The Hebrew is the same as the word for "stand" in 33:21. Moses is to come up in the morning. In Deut. 10:3 he is first to make the ark. That may have been excised here because of 37:1.

3. The holiness of the mount separates it from all but Moses (cf. 19:12). The prohibition against grazing in sacred areas was common in ancient religion, and survives today at Sheikh Adi, the central shrine of the Yezidis in northern Iraq.

4-5a. Moses chiseled out two tablets and with these in his hands ascended the mount. The Lord came down in the cloud and stood with him there. Most commentators (Driver, Exodus, p. 366; Beer, Exodus, p. 160; cf. also, LXX ad loc.) designate Moses as the subject of the verb stood. That means also that Moses called upon the name of the LORD. The last part of vs. 5 then has no connection with 33:19 or vs. 6 immediately following.

5b-9. See Exeg. on 34:5b, 6-7, 8-9, pp. 1075-76.

changes, so that the second Decalogue as given here is not the same as the first. A table of contents would run as follows: only Yahweh is to be worshiped (vs. 14); no molten images are to be made (vs. 17); the feast of unleavened bread is to be observed (vs. 18); concerning firstlings of cattle (vss. 19-20); the sabbath (vs. 21); harvest and vintage feasts (vs. 22); all males to appear before Yahweh thrice in the year (vs. 23); leavened bread not to be offered (vs. 25a); firstfruits to be offered (26a); a kid not to be boiled in its mother's milk (vs. 26b). See Expos., pp. 850-51. A study of the two forms of the Decalogue gives one some conception of the gradual ways of God's revelation of truth to man.

that will by no means clear the guilty; visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, and upon the children's children, unto the third and to the fourth generation.

8 And Moses made haste, and bowed his head toward the earth, and worshipped.

9 And he said, If now I have found grace in thy sight, O Lord, let my Lord, I pray thee, go among us; for it is a stiffnecked people; and pardon our iniquity and our sin, and take us for thine inheritance.

10 ¶ And he said, Behold, I make a covenant: before all thy people I will do marvels, such as have not been done in all the earth, nor in any nation: and all the people among which thou art shall see the work of the LORD: for it is a terrible thing that I will do with thee.

11 Observe thou that which I command thee this day: behold, I drive out before thee the Amorite, and the Canaanite, and the Hittite, and the Perizzite, and the Hivite, and the Jebusite.

12 Take heed to thyself, lest thou make a covenant with the inhabitants of the land whither thou goest, lest it be for a snare in the midst of thee:

13 But ye shall destroy their altars, break their images, and cut down their groves:

14 For thou shalt worship no other god: for the LORD, whose name is Jealous, is a jealous God.

15 Lest thou make a covenant with the inhabitants of the land, and they go a whoring after their gods, and do sacrifice unto their gods, and one call thee, and thou eat of his sacrifice;

16 And thou take of their daughters unto thy sons, and their daughters go a whoring after their gods, and make thy sons go a whoring after their gods.

gression and sin, but who will by no means clear the guilty, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children and the children's children, to the third and the fourth generation." 8 And Moses made haste to bow his head toward the earth, and worshipped. 9 And he said, "If now I have found favor in thy sight, O LORD, let the LORD, I pray thee, go in the midst of us, although it is a stiff-necked people; and pardon our iniquity and our sin, and take us for thy inheritance."

10 And he said, "Behold, I make a covenant. Before all your people I will do marvels, such as have not been wrought in all the earth or in any nation; and all the people among whom you are shall see the work of the LORD; for it is a terrible thing that I will do with you.

11 "Observe what I command you this day. Behold, I will drive out before you the Amorites, the Canaanites, the Hittites, the Perizzites, the Hivites, and the Jebusites. 12 Take heed to yourself, lest you make a covenant with the inhabitants of the land whither you go, lest it become a snare in the midst of you. 13 You shall tear down their altars, and break their pillars, and cut down their Ashe'rim 14 (for you shall worship no other god, for the LORD, whose name is Jealous, is a jealous God), 15 lest you make a covenant with the inhabitants of the land, and when they play the harlot after their gods and sacrifice to their gods and one invites you, you eat of his sacrifice, 16 and you take of their daughters for your sons, and their daughters play the harlot after their gods and make your sons play the harlot after their gods.

10. The covenant is made as a promise. God will do marvels. The wonder of Israel's deliverance from Egypt is no longer the sanction for the law (cf. 20:2). Historical revelation is replaced by a species of sacramental mysticism. This verse is characteristic of P, as is also shown by the use of the word "created" (ברא) for the wonders God will do.

11. The preface closes with a Deuteronomic promise as the basis of exhortation (cf. 23:27-31; 33:2).

b) THE LAWS (34:12-28)

12-16. In Palestine Israel must make no treaties with native peoples (cf. 23:22). This Deuteronomic attempt to segregate Israel cultically and ethnically overlooks much of Israel's early social and religious history. The destruction of the altars, pillars, and sacred poles of the Canaanites was an accomplishment of the reign of Josiah in the seventh 17 Thou shalt make thee no molten gods.

18 ¶ The feast of unleavened bread shalt thou keep. Seven days thou shalt eat unleavened bread, as I commanded thee, in the time of the month Abib: for in the month Abib thou camest out from Egypt.

19 All that openeth the matrix is mine; and every firstling among thy cattle, whether ox or sheep, that is male.

20 But the firstling of an ass thou shalt redeem with a lamb: and if thou redeem him not, then shalt thou break his neck. All the firstborn of thy sons thou shalt redeem. And none shall appear before me empty.

21 ¶ Six days thou shalt work, but on the seventh day thou shalt rest: in earring time and in harvest thou shalt rest.

22 ¶ And thou shalt observe the feast of weeks, of the firstfruits of wheat harvest, and the feast of ingathering at the year's end.

23 ¶ Thrice in the year shall all your men children appear before the Lord God, the God of Israel.

24 For I will cast out the nations before thee, and enlarge thy borders: neither shall 17 "You shall make for yourself no molten gods.

18 "The feast of unleavened bread you shall keep. Seven days you shall eat unleavened bread, as I commanded you, at the time appointed in the month Abib; for in the month Abib you came out from Egypt. 19 All that opens the womb is mine, all your male cattle, the firstling of cow and sheep. 20 The firstlings of an ass you shall redeem with a lamb, or if you will not redeem it you shall break its neck. All the first-born of your sons you shall redeem. And none shall appear before me empty.

21 "Six days you shall work, but on the seventh day you shall rest; in plowing time and in harvest you shall rest. 22 And you shall observe the feast of weeks, the first fruits of wheat harvest, and the feast of ingathering at the year's end. 23 Three times in the year shall all your males appear before the LORD God, the God of Israel. 24 For I will cast out nations before you, and enlarge your borders; neither shall any man century (cf. 23:24; Deut. 7:5; 12:3). Israel must worship no other god (cf. 23:23). This basic law (20:3) is here applied solely to the problem of Israel's dealings with the Canaanites. Yahweh's name is Jealous. His nature is such as to permit no rivals (20:5; Deut. 4:24). Therefore treaties must be avoided, for treaties would imply the coexistence of Canaanite and Israelite altars. Canaanites would invite (plural in LXX) Israelites to share in their sacrifices by offering them meat consecrated to their gods (cf. I Cor. 8:10). Intermarriage is a particularly fertile source of syncretism of this sort (Deut. 7:3-4).

17. The question of hewn representations is left open (cf. 20:23).

18. The provision for the feast of Unleavened Bread is identical with 23:15. In neither case is the Passover associated with it (cf. vs. 25). It seems plausible, as suggested by Beer (Exodus, p. 160), that the verse was inserted by the editor of JE.

19. The law of the first-born as stated here corresponds to 22:30. The first-born males of cow and sheep must be offered to God.

20a. The provision for the redemption of the ass and of the sons is identical with 13:13.

20b. Cf. 22:29. The offerings of the first fruits at the festivals and the offerings of first-born must be punctually observed.

21. The sabbath must be kept even when, because of the pressure of work in plowing time and in harvest, it might seem better not to do so (cf. 20:8-11; 23:12).

22-23. These verses are nearly identical with 23:16-17. Pentecost is here called feast of weeks, which is its specifically Israelite title. Tabernacles is still called by its older title, feast of ingathering. In ch. 22 the equivalent of vs. 18 immediately precedes the reference to these two festivals, thus accounting for the three times in the year.

24. This idyllic picture describes the blessing that will ensue if Israelites are faithful to the law. Their nation will be strong; and no man will molest their property when they make their three yearly pilgrimages.

any man desire thy land, when thou shalt go up to appear before the LORD thy God thrice in the year.

25 Thou shalt not offer the blood of my sacrifice with leaven; neither shall the sacrifice of the feast of the passover be left unto the morning.

26 The first of the firstfruits of thy land thou shalt bring unto the house of the LORD thy God. Thou shalt not seethe a kid in his mother's milk.

27 And the LORD said unto Moses, Write thou these words: for after the tenor of these words I have made a covenant with thee and with Israel.

28 And he was there with the LORD forty days and forty nights; he did neither eat bread, nor drink water. And he wrote upon the tables the words of the covenant, the ten commandments.[†]

29 ¶ And it came to pass, when Moses came down from mount Sinai with the two tables of testimony in Moses' hand, when he came down from the mount, that Moses wist not that the skin of his face shone while he talked with him.

desire your land, when you go up to appear before the LORD your God three times in the year.

25 "You shall not offer the blood of my sacrifice with leaven; neither shall the sacrifice of the feast of the passover be left until the morning. 26 The first of the first fruits of your ground you shall bring to the house of the LORD your God. You shall not boil a kid in its mother's milk." 27 And the LORD said to Moses, "Write these words; in accordance with these words I have made a covenant with you and with Israel." 28 And he was there with the LORD forty days and forty nights; he neither ate bread nor drank water. And he wrote upon the tables the words of the covenant, the ten commandments.[†]

29 When Moses came down from Mount Sinai, with the two tables of the testimony in his hand as he came down from the mountain, Moses did not know that the skin of his face shone because he had been talk-

[†] Heb words

25-26. These three provisions are identical with 23:18-19, except that the Passover is mentioned here. Consequently, the fat which burned on the altar in other sacrifices is here changed to the sacrifice, i.e., to the lamb eaten at Passover.

27-28. As in 24:4, Moses writes the laws, though here in Yahweh's presence. They condition the covenant relationship which is here established with Moses and with Israel. Moses is given an exalted place in the relationship corresponding to the general spirit of chs. 32-34. As stated above (pp. 1076-77) the original words of the covenant can no longer be specified with any degree of certainty. Here the phrase probably refers to whatever poem of the Covenant Code was in the J document before it was combined with E. The ten commandments (Deut. 4:13; 10:4) is probably a later addition. Here it designates what is now left of the J version of the code (vss. 12-26), the so-called "ritual decalogue." It is possible, though scarcely mandatory, to order its provisions in ten parts. In Deut. 9:18; 10:10 it is held that Moses spent two vigils of forty days and forty nights on the mount (cf. 24:18). This tells us that when Deuteronomy was written, chs. 32-34 were already treated as an account of the breaking and renewal of the covenant.

c) THE TRANSFIGURATION OF MOSES (34:29-35)

29. The quasi divine status of Moses is here indicated by making the transfiguration of his face a sign and seal for the divine origin of the law. The phrase two tables of the testimony shows that this concluding section belongs to P (cf. also Aaron and all the people [vs. 31]). But in its exaltation of Moses it compares with chs. 32-34. When Moses talked with God, the skin of his face shone. The LXX says it was "glorified." The light of the Shekinah or divine Presence was communicated to him. This account is the antetype for the account of the transfiguration in the N.T. (Matt. 17:1-7). Moses did not know that the glory for which he had prayed (33:18) was actually effected in him personally.

30 And when Aaron and all the children of Israel saw Moses, behold, the skin of his face shone; and they were afraid to come nigh him.

31 And Moses called unto them; and Aaron and all the rulers of the congregation returned unto him: and Moses talked with them.

32 And afterward all the children of Israel came nigh: and he gave them in commandment all that the LORD had spoken with him in mount Sinai.

33 And till Moses had done speaking with them, he put a veil on his face.

34 But when Moses went in before the LORD to speak with him, he took the veil off, until he came out. And he came out, and spake unto the children of Israel that which he was commanded.

35 And the children of Israel saw the face of Moses, that the skin of Moses' face shone: and Moses put the veil upon his face again, until he went in to speak with him.

ing with God. 30 And when Aaron and all the people of Israel saw Moses, behold, the skin of his face shone, and they were afraid to come near him. 31 But Moses called to them; and Aaron and all the leaders of the congregation returned to him, and Moses talked with them. 32 And afterward all the people of Israel came near, and he gave them in commandment all that the LORD had spoken with him in Mount Sinai. 33 And when Moses had finished speaking with them, he put a veil on his face; 34 but whenever Moses went in before the LORD to speak with him, he took the veil off, until he came out; and when he came out, and told the people of Israel what he was commanded, 35 the people of Israel saw the face of Moses, that the skin of Moses' face shone; and Moses would put the veil upon his face again, until he went in to speak with him.

30-32. Moses impresses Aaron and all the others as possessing a measure of holiness beyond their range. They were afraid to come near him. God's holiness is treated as though it were a semifluid substance with which no one must be charged beyond his capacity. Moses stands at the border of heaven and earth. But Moses called to them. First to the leaders and then to the people he communicates God's will. The covenant is sealed in his person in contrast to 24:9-11.

33-35. These verses refer to a habitual practice of Moses, which, it is intimated, was adopted because of the single incident cited above. Except when appearing in the presence of God and when communicating his word to the people, he kept his face covered with a veil. The word occurs only here. Beer (Exodus, p. 164), following Gressmann, suggests that it is a mask such as is common among primitive priesthoods. Such masks are a protection against demons and also protect the common people from the excessive holiness of the priest. They are often worn by the priest to protect him in his approach to the god. Here it is noteworthy that Moses faces Yahweh with his face uncovered. In II Cor. 3:7-18 Paul accounts for the veiling of Moses' face on the assumption that the

33-35. Moses Veils His Face.—The verb translated shone occurs only twice in Hebrew literature: here and in Ps. 69:31, where it is used of a bullock displaying horns. The verb is derived from the noun "horn." The Vulg. translates it "horned," hence the representation by the old painters and Michelangelo of Moses with horns. In Job. 3:4 "horns" denote rays of light or lightning flashes. So the translation in English is probably what was meant. Vss. 34-35 are an editorial attempt to explain the veil, for which no meaning has been given. The implication is that the veil was used because the reflection of the divine glory was too sacred to be gazed at by human eyes (see Exeg.). The episode has endless applications. Many a doctor and minister can testify that the phenomenon of the shining face was not only to be seen in Moses. Often they and others have been confronted with it shining on them from beds of pain, so that they too seemed to need the intervention of a veil to shield them from the piercing splendor of the divine soul shining through the frail body. It was noted at martyrdoms that the face of the agonizing sufferer sometimes seemed alight with a flame more triumphant than that consuming the faggots. In simpler ways the same experience

35 And Moses gathered all the congregation of the children of Israel together, and said unto them, These are the words which the LORD hath commanded, that ye should do them.

2 Six days shall work be done, but on the seventh day there shall be to you a holy day, a sabbath of rest to the LORD: whosoever doeth work therein shall be put to death.

3 Ye shall kindle no fire throughout your habitations upon the sabbath day.

4 ¶ And Moses spake unto all the congregation of the children of Israel, saying, This is the thing which the LORD commanded, saying,

5 Take ye from among you an offering unto the LORD: whosoever is of a willing heart, let him bring it, an offering of the LORD; gold, and silver, and brass,

6 And blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine linen, and goats' hair,

7 And rams' skins dyed red, and badgers' skins, and shittim wood,

8 And oil for the light, and spices for anointing oil, and for the sweet incense, 9 And onyx stones, and stones to be set for the ephod, and for the breastplate.

10 And every wise-hearted among you shall come, and make all that the LORD hath commanded;

35 Moses assembled all the congregation of the people of Israel, and said to them, "These are the things which the LORD has commanded you to do. 2 Six days shall work be done, but on the seventh day you shall have a holy sabbath of solemn rest to the LORD; whoever does any work on it shall be put to death; 3 you shall kindle no fire in all your habitations on the sabbath day."

4 Moses said to all the congregation of the people of Israel, "This is the thing which the LORD has commanded. 5 Take from among you an offering to the LORD; whoever is of a generous heart, let him bring the LORD's offering: gold, silver, and bronze; 6 blue and purple and scarlet stuff and fine twined linen; goats' hair, 7 tanned rams' skins, and goatskins; acacia wood, 8 oil for the light, spices for the anointing oil and for the fragrant incense, 9 and onyx stones and stones for setting, for the ephod and for the breastpiece.

10 "And let every able man among you come and make all that the LORD has com-

"glory" faded quickly after Moses had left the presence of Yahweh; rather than remind people of the frailty of their means of access to God, Moses veils his face!

D. THE EXECUTION OF THE CULT ORDINANCES (35:1-40:38)

1. THE SABBATH (35:1-3)

35:1-3. The sabbath law as here stated ignores the rich account of its source and meaning provided by P in 31:12-17. In its provision that on six days shall work be done it seems to concentrate on the work of the tabernacle, the announcement of which the brief statement of the law serves to introduce. Galling accentuates this particular reference by emending the Hebrew text in vs. 3 to read, "For all the work you have planned you shall kindle no fire . . . on the sabbath day," making the fires refer to those needed for the work in metals (Beer, Exodus, p. 164).

2. THE OFFERING (35:4-29)

Moses carefully communicates God's instructions concerning the offering (cf. 25:1-9) to all the congregation of the people of Israel (vss. 4-9). In vs. 10 there is an invitation is noted among kindly, humble folks. "Grandma," said one child, "must sleep in heaven, she is always so happy at breakfast," and the epitaph of a minister on the Hill in Andover states that even to meet him on the street made one feel that life was more worth while: "He wist not that his face shone."

35:1-39:43. These are almost exact repetitions of previous chapters with changes of person and tense.

11 The tabernacle, his tent, and his covering, his taches, and his boards, his bars, his pillars, and his sockets;

12 The ark, and the staves thereof, with the mercy seat, and the veil of the covering;

13 The table, and his staves, and all his vessels, and the showbread;

14 The candlestick also for the light, and his furniture, and his lamps, with the oil for the light;

15 And the incense altar, and his staves, and the anointing oil, and the sweet incense, and the hanging for the door at the entering in of the tabernacle;

16 The altar of burnt offering, with his brazen grate, his staves, and all his vessels, the laver and his foot;

17 The hangings of the court, his pillars, and their sockets, and the hanging for the door of the court;

18 The pins of the tabernacle, and the pins of the court, and their cords;

19 The clothes of service, to do service in the holy place, the holy garments for Aaron the priest, and the garments of his sons, to minister in the priest's office.

20 ¶ And all the congregation of the children of Israel departed from the presence of Moses.

21 And they came, every one whose heart stirred him up, and every one whom his spirit made willing, and they brought the LORD's offering to the work of the tabernacle of the congregation, and for all his service, and for the holy garments.

22 And they came, both men and women, as many as were willing-hearted, and brought bracelets, and earrings, and rings, and tablets, all jewels of gold: and every man that offered, offered an offering of gold unto the LORD.

23 And every man, with whom was found blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine linen, and goats' hair, and red skins of rams, and badgers' skins, brought them.

24 Every one that did offer an offering of silver and brass brought the LORD's offering: and every man, with whom was found shittim wood for any work of the service, brought it.

manded: the tabernacle, 11 its tent and its covering, its hooks and its frames, its bars, its pillars, and its bases; 12 the ark with its poles, the mercy seat, and the veil of the screen; 13 the table with its poles and all its utensils, and the bread of the Presence; 14 the lampstand also for the light, with its utensils and its lamps, and the oil for the light; 15 and the altar of incense, with its poles, and the anointing oil and the fragrant incense, and the screen for the door, at the door of the tabernacle; 16 the altar of burnt offering, with its grating of bronze, its poles, and all its utensils, the laver and its base; 17 the hangings of the court, its pillars and its bases, and the screen for the gate of the court; 18 the pegs of the tabernacle and the pegs of the court, and their cords; 19 the finely wrought garments for ministering in the holy place, the holy garments for Aaron the priest, and the garments of his sons, for their service as priests."

20 Then all the congregation of the people of Israel departed from the presence of Moses. 21 And they came, every one whose heart stirred him, and every one whose spirit moved him, and brought the LORD's offering to be used for the tent of meeting, and for all its service, and for the holy garments. 22 So they came, both men and women; all who were of a willing heart brought brooches and earrings and signet rings and armlets, all sorts of gold objects, every man dedicating an offering of gold to the LORD. 23 And every man with whom was found blue or purple or scarlet stuff or fine linen or goats' hair or tanned rams' skins or goatskins, brought them. 24 Every one who could make an offering of silver or bronze brought it as the LORD's offering; and every man, with whom was found acacia wood of to every able man to produce the goods asked for. In all probability this verse was originally followed immediately by vss. 20-29. Vss. 11-19 constitute a list of the objects to be made from the materials offered, including the bread of the Presence (vs. 13). This 25 And all the women that were wise-hearted did spin with their hands, and brought that which they had spun, both of blue, and of purple, and of scarlet, and of fine linen.

26 And all the women whose heart stirred them up in wisdom spun goats' hair.

27 And the rulers brought onyx stones, and stones to be set, for the ephod, and for the breastplate;

28 And spice, and oil for the light, and for the anointing oil, and for the sweet incense.

29 The children of Israel brought a willing offering unto the LORD, every man and woman, whose heart made them willing to bring for all manner of work, which the LORD had commanded to be made by the hand of Moses.

30 ¶ And Moses said unto the children of Israel, See, the LORD hath called by name Bezaleel the son of Uri, the son of Hur, of the tribe of Judah;

31 And he hath filled him with the spirit of God, in wisdom, in understanding, and in knowledge, and in all manner of workmanship;

32 And to devise curious works, to work in gold, and in silver, and in brass, 33 And in the cutting of stones, to set them, and in carving of wood, to make any manner of cunning work.

34 And he hath put in his heart that he may teach, both he, and Aholiab, the son of Ahisamach, of the tribe of Dan.

35 Them hath he filled with wisdom of heart, to work all manner of work, of the engraver, and of the cunning workman, and of the embroiderer, in blue, and in purple, in scarlet, and in fine linen, and of any use in the work, brought it. 25 And all women who had ability spun with their hands, and brought what they had spun in blue and purple and scarlet stuff and fine twined linen; 26 all the women whose hearts were moved with ability spun the goats' hair. 27 And the leaders brought onyx stones and stones to be set, for the ephod and for the breastpiece, 28 and spices and oil for the light, and for the anointing oil, and for the fragrant incense. 29 All the men and women, the people of Israel, whose heart moved them to bring anything for the work which the LORD had commanded by Moses to be done, brought it as their freewill offering to the LORD.

30 And Moses said to the people of Israel, "See, the LORD has called by name Bez'alel the son of Uri, son of Hur, of the tribe of Judah; 31 and he has filled him with the Spirit of God, with ability, with intelligence, with knowledge, and with all craftsmanship, 32 to devise artistic designs, to work in gold and silver and bronze, 33 in cutting stones for setting, and in carving wood, for work in every skilled craft. 34 And he has inspired him to teach, both him and Oho'liab the son of Ahis'amach of the tribe of Dan. 35 He has filled them with ability to do every sort of work done by a craftsman or by a designer or by an embroiderer in blue would hardly have been provided until after the dwelling was complete. Vs. 23 is out of place between vss. 22, 24, which tell of the contributions of precious metals. It belongs with vss. 25-26.

3. BEZALEL AND OHOLIAB (35:30-36:7)

This section was partly dealt with under 31:1-11 above. It is probably the original from which that passage was developed by a very late editor. Note that before actually calling Bezalel and Oholiab to their task (36:2), Moses communicates God's will in this matter to all Israel (vss. 30-35).

34. The two leaders were inspired by God to teach the men who were endowed by God with wisdom or skill. This is an instructive correlation of education with inspiration!

35. To be filled . . . with ability in this context is to be filled with the Spirit of God (31:3).

the weaver, even of them that do any work, and of those that devise cunning work.

36 Then wrought Bezaleel and Aholiab, and every wise-hearted man, in whom the LORD put wisdom and understanding to know how to work all manner of work for the service of the sanctuary, according to all that the LORD had commanded.

2 And Moses called Bezaleel and Aholiab, and every wise-hearted man, in whose heart the LORD had put wisdom, even every one whose heart stirred him up to come unto the work to do it:

3 And they received of Moses all the offering, which the children of Israel had brought for the work of the service of the sanctuary, to make it withal. And they brought yet unto him free offerings every morning.

4 And all the wise men, that wrought all the work of the sanctuary, came every man from his work which they made;

5 ¶ And they spake unto Moses, saying, The people bring much more than enough for the service of the work, which the LORD commanded to make.

6 And Moses gave commandment, and they caused it to be proclaimed throughout the camp, saying, Let neither man nor woman make any more work for the offering of the sanctuary. So the people were restrained from bringing.

7 For the stuff they had was sufficient for all the work to make it, and too much.

8 ¶ And every wise-hearted man among them that wrought the work of the tabernacle made ten curtains of fine twined linen, and blue, and purple, and scarlet: with cherubim of cunning work made he them.

and purple and scarlet stuff and fine twined linen, or by a weaver — by any sort of workman or skilled designer. 1 Bez'alel and Oho'liab and every able man in whom the LORD has put ability and intelligence to know how to do any work in the construction of the sanctuary shall work in accordance with all that the LORD has commanded."

2 And Moses called Bez'alel and Oho'liab and every able man in whose mind the LORD had put ability, every one whose heart stirred him up to come to do the work; 3 and they received from Moses all the freewill offerings which the people of Israel had brought for doing the work on the sanctuary. They still kept bringing him freewill offerings every morning, 4 so that all the able men who were doing every sort of task on the sanctuary came, each from the task that he was doing, 5 and said to Moses, "The people bring much more than enough for doing the work which the LORD has commanded us to do." 6 So Moses gave command, and word was proclaimed throughout the camp, "Let neither man nor woman do anything more for the offering for the sanctuary." So the people were restrained from bringing; 7 for the stuff they had was sufficient to do all the work, and more.

8 And all the able men among the workmen made the tabernacle with ten curtains; they were made of fine twined linen and blue and purple and scarlet stuff, with 36:2. Not only Bezalel and Oholiab, but every able man in whose mind the LORD had put ability, i.e., wisdom, was to share in the task.

3-7. The freewill offering (25:2) which the people brought to Moses proved to be more than sufficient, much more than enough, so Moses requests them to stop. The late account of the poll tax (30:11-16) is as completely ignored here as in ch. 25. This section belongs to the main body of the P narrative.

4. THE TABERNACLE (36:8-38)

See Exeg. on 26:1-37.

a) THE TENT (36:8-19)

See Exeg. on 26:1-14.

9 The length of one curtain was twenty and eight cubits, and the breadth of one curtain four cubits: the curtains were all of one size.

10 And he coupled the five curtains one unto another: and the other five curtains he coupled one unto another.

11 And he made loops of blue on the edge of one curtain from the selvedge in the coupling; likewise he made in the uttermost side of another curtain, in the coupling of the second.

12 Fifty loops made he in one curtain, and fifty loops made he in the edge of the curtain which was in the coupling of the second: the loops held one curtain to another.

13 And he made fifty taches of gold, and coupled the curtains one unto another with the taches: so it became one tabernacle.

14 ¶ And he made curtains of goats' hair for the tent over the tabernacle: eleven curtains he made them.

15 The length of one curtain was thirty cubits, and four cubits was the breadth of one curtain: the eleven curtains were of one size.

16 And he coupled five curtains by themselves, and six curtains by themselves.

17 And he made fifty loops upon the uttermost edge of the curtain in the coupling, and fifty loops made he upon the edge of the curtain which coupleth the second.

18 And he made fifty taches of brass to couple the tent together, that it might be one.

19 And he made a covering for the tent of rams' skins dyed red, and a covering of badgers' skins above that.

20 ¶ And he made boards for the tabernacle of shittim wood, standing up.

21 The length of a board was ten cubits, and the breadth of a board one cubit and a half.

22 One board had two tenons, equally distant one from another: thus did he make for all the boards of the tabernacle.

23 And he made boards for the tabernacle; twenty boards for the south side southward:

cherubim skilfully worked. 9 The length of each curtain was twenty-eight cubits, and the breadth of each curtain four cubits; all the curtains had the same measure.

10 And he coupled five curtains to one another, and the other five curtains he coupled to one another. 11 And he made loops of blue on the edge of the outmost curtain of the first set; likewise he made them on the edge of the outmost curtain of the second set; 12 he made fifty loops on the one curtain, and he made fifty loops on the edge of the curtain that was in the second set; the loops were opposite one another. 13 And he made fifty clasps of gold, and coupled the curtains one to the other with clasps; so the tabernacle was one whole.

14 He also made curtains of goats' hair for a tent over the tabernacle; he made eleven curtains. 15 The length of each curtain was thirty cubits, and the breadth of each curtain four cubits; the eleven curtains had the same measure. 16 He coupled five curtains by themselves, and six curtains by themselves. 17 And he made fifty loops on the edge of the outmost curtain of the one set, and fifty loops on the edge of the other connecting curtain. 18 And he made fifty clasps of bronze to couple the tent together that it might be one whole. 19 And he made for the tent a covering of tanned rams' skins and goatskins.

20 Then he made the upright frames for the tabernacle of acacia wood. 21 Ten cubits was the length of a frame, and a cubit and a half the breadth of each frame. 22 Each frame had two tenons, for fitting together; he did this for all the frames of the tabernacle. 23 The frames for the tabernacle he made thus: twenty frames for the south

b) THE WOODEN STRUCTURE (36:20-34)

See Exeg. on 26:15-30.

24 And forty sockets of silver he made under the twenty boards; two sockets under one board for his two tenons, and two sockets under another board for his two tenons.

25 And for the other side of the tabernacle, which is toward the north corner, he made twenty boards,

26 And their forty sockets of silver; two sockets under one board, and two sockets under another board.

27 And for the sides of the tabernacle westward he made six boards.

28 And two boards made he for the corners of the tabernacle in the two sides.

29 And they were coupled beneath, and coupled together at the head thereof, to one ring: thus he did to both of them in both the corners.

30 And there were eight boards; and their sockets were sixteen sockets of silver, under every board two sockets.

31 ¶ And he made bars of shittim wood; five for the boards of the one side of the tabernacle,

32 And five bars for the boards of the other side of the tabernacle, and five bars for the boards of the tabernacle for the sides westward.

33 And he made the middle bar to shoot through the boards from the one end to the other.

34 And he overlaid the boards with gold, and made their rings of gold to be places for the bars, and overlaid the bars with gold.

35 ¶ And he made a veil of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen: with cherubim made he it of cunning work.

36 And he made thereunto four pillars of shittim wood, and overlaid them with gold: their hooks were of gold; and he cast for them four sockets of silver.

37 ¶ And he made a hanging for the tabernacle door of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen, of needlework;

38 And the five pillars of it with their hooks: and he overlaid their chapiters and their fillets with gold: but their five sockets were of brass.

side; 24 and he made forty bases of silver under the twenty frames, two bases under one frame for its two tenons, and two bases under another frame for its two tenons.

25 And for the second side of the tabernacle, on the north side, he made twenty frames 26 and their forty bases of silver, two bases under one frame and two bases under another frame. 27 And for the rear of the tabernacle westward he made six frames. 28 And he made two frames for corners of the tabernacle in the rear. 29 And they were separate beneath, but joined at the top, at the first ring; he made two of them thus, for the two corners. 30 There were eight frames with their bases of silver: sixteen bases, under every frame two bases.

31 And he made bars of acacia wood, five for the frames of the one side of the tabernacle, 32 and five bars for the frames of the other side of the tabernacle, and five bars for the frames of the tabernacle at the rear westward. 33 And he made the middle bar to pass through from end to end halfway up the frames. 34 And he overlaid the frames with gold, and made their rings of gold for holders for the bars, and overlaid the bars with gold.

35 And he made the veil of blue and purple and scarlet stuff and fine twined linen; with cherubim skilfully worked he made it. 36 And for it he made four pillars of acacia, and overlaid them with gold; their hooks were of gold, and he cast for them four bases of silver. 37 He also made a screen for the door of the tent, of blue and purple and scarlet stuff and fine twined linen, embroidered with needlework; 38 and its five pillars with their hooks. He overlaid their capitals, and their fillets were of gold, but their five bases were of bronze.

c) THE VEIL AND THE SCREEN (36:35-38)

See Exeg. on 26:31-37.

37 And Bezaleel made the ark of shittim wood: two cubits and a half was the length of it, and a cubit and a half the breadth of it, and a cubit and a half the height of it:

2 And he overlaid it with pure gold within and without, and made a crown of gold to it round about.

3 And he cast for it four rings of gold, to be set by the four corners of it; even two rings upon the one side of it, and two rings upon the other side of it.

4 And he made staves of shittim wood, and overlaid them with gold.

5 And he put the staves into the rings by the sides of the ark, to bear the ark.

6 ¶ And he made the mercy seat of pure gold: two cubits and a half was the length thereof, and one cubit and a half the breadth thereof.

7 And he made two cherubim of gold, beaten out of one piece made he them, on the two ends of the mercy seat;

8 One cherub on the end on this side, and another cherub on the other end on that side: out of the mercy seat made he the cherubim on the two ends thereof.

9 And the cherubim spread out their wings on high, and covered with their wings over the mercy seat, with their faces one to another; even to the mercy seat-ward were the faces of the cherubim.

10 ¶ And he made the table of shittim wood: two cubits was the length thereof, and a cubit the breadth thereof, and a cubit and a half the height thereof:

11 And he overlaid it with pure gold, and made thereunto a crown of gold round about.

12 Also he made thereunto a border of a handbreadth round about; and made a crown of gold for the border thereof round about.

13 And he cast for it four rings of gold, and put the rings upon the four corners that were in the four feet thereof.

14 Over against the border were the rings, the places for the staves to bear the table.

37 Bez'alel made the ark of acacia wood; two cubits and a half was its length, a cubit and a half its breadth, and a cubit and a half its height. 2 And he overlaid it with pure gold within and without, and made a molding of gold around it. 3 And he cast for it four rings of gold for its four corners, two rings on its one side and two rings on its other side. 4 And he made poles of acacia wood, and overlaid them with gold, 5 and put the poles into the rings on the sides of the ark, to carry the ark. 6 And he made a mercy seat of pure gold; two cubits and a half was its length, and a cubit and a half its breadth. 7 And he made two cherubim of hammered gold; on the two ends of the mercy seat he made them, 8 one cherub on the one end, and one cherub on the other end; of one piece with the mercy seat he made the cherubim on its two ends. 9 The cherubim spread out their wings above, overshadowing the mercy seat with their wings, with their faces one to another; toward the mercy seat were the faces of the cherubim.

10 He also made the table of acacia wood; two cubits was its length, a cubit its breadth, and a cubit and a half its height; 11 and he overlaid it with pure gold, and made a molding of gold around it. 12 And he made around it a frame a handbreadth wide, and made a molding of gold around the frame. 13 He cast for it four rings of gold, and fastened the rings to the four corners at its four legs. 14 Close to the frame were the rings, as holders for the poles to carry the

5. THE ARK (37:1-9)

See Exeg. on 25:10-22.

6. THE TABLE (37:10-16)

See Exeg. on 25:23-30.

15 And he made the staves of shittim wood, and overlaid them with gold, to bear the table.

16 And he made the vessels which were upon the table, his dishes, and his spoons, and his bowls, and his covers to cover withal, of pure gold.

17 ¶ And he made the candlestick of pure gold: of beaten work made he the candlestick; his shaft, and his branch, his bowls, his knops, and his flowers, were of the same:

18 And six branches going out of the sides thereof; three branches of the candlestick out of the one side thereof, and three branches of the candlestick out of the other side thereof:

19 Three bowls made after the fashion of almonds in one branch, a knop and a flower; and three bowls made like almonds in another branch, a knop and a flower: so throughout the six branches going out of the candlestick.

20 And in the candlestick were four bowls made like almonds, his knops, and his flowers:

21 And a knop under two branches of the same, and a knop under two branches of the same, and a knop under two branches of the same, according to the six branches going out of it.

22 Their knops and their branches were of the same: all of it was one beaten work of pure gold.

23 And he made his seven lamps, and his snuffers, and his snuffdishes, of pure gold.

24 Of a talent of pure gold made he it, and all the vessels thereof.

25 ¶ And he made the incense altar of shittim wood: the length of it was a cubit, and the breadth of it a cubit; it was four-square; and two cubits was the height of it; the horns thereof were of the same.

26 And he overlaid it with pure gold, both the top of it, and the sides thereof round about, and the horns of it: also he made unto it a crown of gold round about.

table. 15 He made the poles of acacia wood to carry the table, and overlaid them with gold. 16 And he made the vessels of pure gold which were to be upon the table, its plates and dishes for incense, and its bowls and flagons with which to pour libations.

17 He also made the lampstand of pure gold. The base and the shaft of the lampstand were made of hammered work; its cups, its capitals, and its flowers were of one piece with it. 18 And there were six branches going out of its sides, three branches of the lampstand out of one side of it and three branches of the lampstand out of the other side of it; 19 three cups made like almonds, each with capital and flower, on one branch, and three cups made like almonds, each with capital and flower, on the other branch—so for the six branches going out of the lampstand. 20 And on the lampstand itself were four cups made like almonds, with their capitals and flowers, 21 and a capital of one piece with it under each pair of the six branches going out of it. 22 Their capitals and their branches were of one piece with it; the whole of it was one piece of hammered work of pure gold. 23 And he made its seven lamps and its snuffers and its trays of pure gold. 24 He made it and all its utensils of a talent of pure gold.

25 He made the altar of incense of acacia wood; its length was a cubit, and its breadth was a cubit; it was square, and two cubits was its height; its horns were of one piece with it. 26 He overlaid it with pure gold, its top, and its sides round about, and its horns; and he made a molding of gold round about

7. THE LAMPSTAND (37:17-24)

See Exeg. on 25:31-40.

8. THE ALTAR OF INCENSE (37:25-28)

See Exeg. on 30:1-10.

27 And he made two rings of gold for it under the crown thereof, by the two corners of it, upon the two sides thereof, to be places for the staves to bear it withal.

28 And he made the staves of shittim wood, and overlaid them with gold.

29 ¶ And he made the holy anointing oil, and the pure incense of sweet spices, according to the work of the apothecary.

38 And he made the altar of burnt offering of shittim wood: five cubits was the length thereof, and five cubits the breadth thereof; it was foursquare; and three cubits the height thereof.

2 And he made the horns thereof on the four corners of it; the horns thereof were of the same: and he overlaid it with brass.

3 And he made all the vessels of the altar, the pots, and the shovels, and the basins, and the fleshhooks, and the firepans: all the vessels thereof made he of brass.

4 And he made for the altar a brazen grate of network, under the compass thereof, beneath unto the midst of it.

5 And he cast four rings for the four ends of the grate of brass, to be places for the staves.

6 And he made the staves of shittim wood, and overlaid them with brass.

7 And he put the staves into the rings on the sides of the altar, to bear it withal; he made the altar hollow with boards.

8 ¶ And he made the laver of brass, and the foot of it of brass, of the looking-glasses of the women assembling, which assembled at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

9 ¶ And he made the court: on the south side southward the hangings of the court were of fine twined linen, a hundred cubits:

10 Their pillar were twenty, and their brazen sockets twenty; the hooks of the pillars and their fillets were of silver.

it, 27 and made two rings of gold on it under its molding, on two opposite sides of it, as holders for the poles with which to carry it. 28 And he made the poles of acacia wood, and overlaid them with gold.

29 He made the holy anointing oil also, and the pure fragrant incense, blended as by the perfumer.

38 He made the altar of burnt offering also of acacia wood; five cubits was its length, and five cubits its breadth; it was square, and three cubits was its height. 2 He made horns for it on its four corners; its horns were of one piece with it, and he overlaid it with bronze. 3 And he made all the utensils of the altar, the pots, the shovels, the basins, the forks, and the fire pans: all its utensils he made of bronze. 4 And he made for the altar a grating, a network of bronze, under its ledge, extending halfway down. 5 He cast four rings on the four corners of the bronze grating as holders for the poles; 6 he made the poles of acacia wood, and overlaid them with bronze. 7 And he put the poles through the rings on the sides of the altar, to carry it with them; he made it hollow, with boards.

8 And he made the laver of bronze and its base of bronze, from the mirrors of the ministering women who ministered at the door of the tent of meeting.

9 And he made the court; for the south side the hangings of the court were of fine twined linen, a hundred cubits; 10 their pillars were twenty and their bases twenty, of bronze, but the hooks of the pillars and

9. THE HALLOWED INCENSE AND OIL (37:29)

See Exeg. on 30:22-38.

10. THE BRASS ALTAR (38:1-7)

See Exeg. on 27:1-8.

11. THE BRASS LAVER (38:8)

See Exeg. on 30:17-21.

12. THE TABERNACLE COURT (38:9-20)

See Exeg. on 27:9-19.

11 And for the north side the hangings were a hundred cubits, their pillars were twenty, and their sockets of brass twenty; the hooks of the pillars and their fillets of silver.

12 And for the west side were hangings of fifty cubits, their pillars ten, and their sockets ten; the hooks of the pillars and their fillets of silver.

13 And for the east side eastward fifty cubits.

14 The hangings of the one side of the gate were fifteen cubits; their pillars three, and their sockets three.

15 And for the other side of the court gate, on this hand and that hand, were hangings of fifteen cubits; their pillars three, and their sockets three.

16 All the hangings of the court round about were of fine twined linen.

17 And the sockets for the pillars were of brass; the hooks of the pillars and their fillets of silver; and the overlaying of their chapiters of silver; and all the pillars of the court were filleted with silver.

18 And the hanging for the gate of the court was needlework, of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen: and twenty cubits was the length, and the height in the breadth was five cubits, answerable to the hangings of the court.

19 And their pillars were four, and their sockets of brass four; their hooks of silver, and the overlaying of their chapiters and their fillets of silver.

20 And all the pins of the tabernacle, and of the court round about, were of brass.

21 ¶ This is the sum of the tabernacle, even of the tabernacle of testimony, as it was counted, according to the commandment of Moses, for the service of the Levites, by the hand of Ithamar, son to Aaron the priest.

22 And Bezaleel the son of Uri, the son of Hur, of the tribe of Judah, made all that the LORD commanded Moses.

23 And with him was Aholiab, son of Ahisamach, of the tribe of Dan, an en-their fillets were of silver. 11 And for the north side a hundred cubits, their pillars twenty, their bases twenty, of bronze, but the hooks of the pillars and their fillets of silver. 12 And for the west side were hangings of fifty cubits, their pillars ten, and their sockets ten; the hooks of the pillars and their fillets were of silver. 13 And for the front to the east, fifty cubits. 14 The hangings for one side of the gate were fifteen cubits, with three pillars and three bases. 15 And so for the other side; on this hand and that hand by the gate of the court were hangings of fifteen cubits, with three pillars and three bases. 16 All the hangings round about the court were of fine twined linen. 17 And the bases for the pillars were of bronze, but the hooks of the pillars and their fillets were of silver; the overlaying of their capitals was also of silver, and all the pillars of the court were filleted with silver. 18 And the screen for the gate of the court was embroidered with needlework in blue and purple and scarlet stuff and fine twined linen; it was twenty cubits long and five cubits high in its breadth, corresponding to the hangings of the court. 19 And their pillars were four; their four bases were of bronze, their hooks of silver, and the overlaying of their capitals and their fillets of silver. 20 And all the pegs for the tabernacle and for the court round about were of bronze.

21 This is the sum of the things for the tabernacle, the tabernacle of the testimony, as they were counted at the commandment of Moses, for the work of the Levites under the direction of Ith'amar the son of Aaron the priest. 22 Bez'alel the son of Uri, son of Hur, of the tribe of Judah, made all that the LORD commanded Moses; 23 and with him was Oho'liab the son of Ahis'a-

13. SUMMARY OF OFFERINGS (38:21-31)

In this summary of materials used in the manufacture of the tabernacle and its equipment the Levites, under Ithamar (vs. 20), are associated with Bezalel and Oholiab (cf. 31:1-11; 35:30-36:7). It appears therefore to be a very late addition to P (PS). The census (Num. 1:13) is assumed to have taken place before the tabernacle was built (cf.

graver, and a cunning workman, and an embroiderer in blue, and in purple, and in scarlet, and fine linen.

24 All the gold that was occupied for the work in all the work of the holy place, even the gold of the offering, was twenty and nine talents, and seven hundred and thirty shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary.

25 And the silver of them that were numbered of the congregation was a hundred talents, and a thousand seven hundred and threescore and fifteen shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary:

26 A bekah for every man, that is, half a shekel, after the shekel of the sanctuary, for every one that went to be numbered, from twenty years old and upward, for six hundred thousand and three thousand and five hundred and fifty men.

27 And of the hundred talents of silver were cast the sockets of the sanctuary, and the sockets of the veil; a hundred sockets of the hundred talents, a talent for a socket.

28 And of the thousand seven hundred seventy and five shekels he made hooks for the pillars, and overlaid their chapiters, and filleted them.

29 And the brass of the offering was seventy talents, and two thousand and four hundred shekels.

30 And therewith he made the sockets to the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and the brazen altar, and the brazen grate for it, and all the vessels of the altar,

31 And the sockets of the court round about, and the sockets of the court gate, and all the pins of the tabernacle, and all the pins of the court round about.

39 And of the blue, and purple, and scarlet, they made clothes of service, to do service in the holy place, and made the holy garments for Aaron; as the LORD commanded Moses.

mach, of the tribe of Dan, a craftsman and designer and embroiderer in blue and purple and scarlet stuff and fine twined linen.

24 All the gold that was used for the work, in all the construction of the sanctuary, the gold from the offering, was twenty-nine talents and seven hundred and thirty shekels, by the shekel of the sanctuary.

25 And the silver from those of the congregation who were numbered was a hundred talents and a thousand seven hundred and seventy-five shekels, by the shekel of the sanctuary: 26 a beka a head (that is, half a shekel, by the shekel of the sanctuary), for every one who was numbered in the census, from twenty years old and upward, for six hundred and three thousand, five hundred and fifty men. 27 The hundred talents of silver were for casting the bases of the sanctuary, and the bases of the veil; a hundred bases for the hundred talents, a talent for a base. 28 And of the thousand seven hundred and seventy-five shekels he made hooks for the pillars, and overlaid their capitals and made fillets for them. 29 And the bronze that was contributed was seventy talents, and two thousand and four hundred shekels; 30 with it he made the bases for the door of the tent of meeting, the bronze altar and the bronze grating for it and all the utensils of the altar, 31 the bases round about the court, and the bases of the gate of the court, all the pegs of the tabernacle, and all the pegs round about the court.

39 And of the blue and purple and scarlet stuff they made finely wrought garments, for ministering in the holy place; they made the holy garments for Aaron; as the LORD had commanded Moses.

30:11-16). The Hebrew for contribution (vs. 24) is here not terûmāh, as in 30:13, but tenûphāh, i.e., gift of dedication, to conform to the view presented that the poll tax was used in the building of the sanctuary.

14. THE PRIESTHOOD AND ITS DRESS (39:1-31)

See Exeg. on 28:1-43.

a) INTRODUCTION (39:1)

See Exeg. on 28:1-5.

2 And he made the ephod of gold, blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen.

3 And they did beat the gold into thin plates, and cut it into wires to work it in the blue, and in the purple, and in the scarlet, and in the fine linen, with cunning work.

4 They made shoulderpieces for it, to couple it together: by the two edges was it coupled together.

5 And the curious girdle of his ephod, that was upon it, was of the same, according to the work thereof; of gold, blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen; as the LORD commanded Moses.

6 ¶ And they wrought onyx stones inclosed in ouches of gold, graven, as signets are graven, with the names of the children of Israel.

7 And he put them on the shoulders of the ephod, that they should be stones for a memorial to the children of Israel; as the LORD commanded Moses.

8 ¶ And he made the breastplate of cunning work, like the work of the ephod; of gold, blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen.

9 It was foursquare; they made the breastplate double: a span was the length thereof, and a span the breadth thereof, being doubled.

10 And they set in it four rows of stones: the first row was a sardius, a topaz, and a carbuncle: this was the first row.

11 And the second row, an emerald, a sapphire, and a diamond.

12 And the third row, a ligure, an agate, and an amethyst.

13 And the fourth row, a beryl, an onyx, and a jasper: they were inclosed in ouches of gold in their inclosings.

14 And the stones were according to the names of the children of Israel, twelve according to their names, like the engravings of a signet, every one with his name, according to the twelve tribes.

2 And he made the ephod of gold, blue and purple and scarlet stuff, and fine twined linen. 3 And gold leaf was hammered out and cut into threads to work into the blue and purple and the scarlet stuff, and into the fine twined linen, in skilled design. 4 They made for the ephod shoulderpieces, joined to it at its two edges. 5 And the skilfully woven band upon it, to gird it on, was of the same materials and workmanship, of gold, blue and purple and scarlet stuff, and fine twined linen; as the LORD had commanded Moses.

6 The onyx stones were prepared, enclosed in settings of gold filigree and engraved like the engravings of a signet, according to the names of the sons of Israel.

7 And he set them on the shoulder-pieces of the ephod, to be stones of remembrance for the sons of Israel; as the LORD had commanded Moses.

8 He made the breastpiece, in skilled work, like the work of the ephod, of gold, blue and purple and scarlet stuff, and fine twined linen. 9 It was square; the breast-piece was made double, a span its length and a span its breadth when doubled. 10 And they set in it four rows of stones. A row of sardius, topaz, and carbuncle was the first row; 11 and the second row, an emerald, a sapphire, and a diamond; 12 and the third row, a jacinth, an agate, and an amethyst; 13 and the fourth row, a beryl, an onyx, and a jasper; they were enclosed in settings of gold filigree. 14 There were twelve stones with their names according to the names of the sons of Israel; they were like signets, each engraved with its name, for the

b) THE EPHOD (39:2-7)

See Exeg. on 28:6-12.

c) THE BREASTPIECE (39:8-21)

See Exeg. on 28:13-30.

15 And they made upon the breastplate chains at the ends, of wreathed work of pure gold.

16 And they made two ouches of gold, and two gold rings, and put the two rings in the two ends of the breastplate.

17 And they put the two wreathed chains of gold in the two rings on the ends of the breastplate.

18 And the two ends of the two wreathed chains they fastened in the two ouches, and put them on the shoulderpieces of the ephod, before it.

19 And they made two rings of gold, and put them on the two ends of the breastplate, upon the border of it, which was on the side of the ephod inward.

20 And they made two other golden rings, and put them on the two sides of the ephod underneath, toward the forepart of it, over against the other coupling thereof, above the curious girdle of the ephod.

21 And they did bind the breastplate by his rings unto the rings of the ephod with a lace of blue, that it might be above the curious girdle of the ephod, and that the breastplate might not be loosed from the ephod; as the LORD commanded Moses.

22 ¶ And he made the robe of the ephod of woven work, all of blue.

23 And there was a hole in the midst of the robe, as the hole of an habergeon, with a band round about the hole, that it should not rend.

24 And they made upon the hems of the robe pomegranates of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and twined linen.

25 And they made bells of pure gold, and put the bells between the pomegranates upon the hem of the robe, round about between the pomegranates;

26 A bell and a pomegranate, a bell and a pomegranate, round about the hem of the robe to minister in; as the LORD commanded Moses.

27 ¶ And they made coats of fine linen of woven work for Aaron, and for his sons, twelve tribes. 15 And they made on the breastpiece twisted chains like cords, of pure gold; 16 and they made two settings of gold filigree and two gold rings, and put the two rings on the two edges of the breastpiece; 17 and they put the two cords of gold in the two rings at the edges of the breastpiece. 18 Two ends of the two cords they had attached to the two settings of filigree; thus they attached it in front to the shoulderpieces of the ephod. 19 Then they made two rings of gold, and put them at the two ends of the breastpiece, on its inside edge next to the ephod. 20 And they made two rings of gold, and attached them in front to the lower part of the two shoulderpieces of the ephod, at its joining above the skilfully woven band of the ephod. 21 And they bound the breastpiece by its rings to the rings of the ephod with a lace of blue, so that it should lie upon the skilfully woven band of the ephod, and that the breastpiece should not come loose from the ephod; as the LORD had commanded Moses.

22 He also made the robe of the ephod woven all of blue; 23 and the opening of the robe in it was like the opening in a garment, with a binding around its opening, that it might not be torn. 24 On the skirts of the robe they made pomegranates of blue and purple and scarlet stuff and fine twined linen. 25 They also made bells of pure gold, and put the bells between the pomegranates upon the skirts of the robe round about, between the pomegranates; 26 a bell and a pomegranate, a bell and a pomegranate round about upon the skirts of the robe for ministering; as the LORD had commanded Moses.

27 They also made the coats, woven of

d) THE ROBE OF THE EPHOD (39:22-26)

See Exeg. on 28:31-35.

e) THE DIADEM, TURBAN, COAT, AND GARMENTS FOR AARON'S SONS (39:27-31)

See Exeg. on 28:36-43.

28 And a mitre of fine linen, and goodly bonnets of fine linen, and linen breeches of fine twined linen, 29 And a girdle of fine twined linen, and blue, and purple, and scarlet, of needlework; as the LORD commanded Moses.

30 ¶ And they made the plate of the holy crown of pure gold, and wrote upon it a writing, like to the engravings of a signet, HOLINESS TO THE LORD.

31 And they tied unto it a lace of blue, to fasten it on high upon the mitre; as the LORD commanded Moses.

32 ¶ Thus was all the work of the tabernacle of the tent of the congregation finished: and the children of Israel did according to all that the LORD commanded Moses, so did they.

33 ¶ And they brought the tabernacle unto Moses, the tent, and all his furniture, his taches, his boards, his bars, and his pillars, and his sockets;

34 And the covering of rams' skins dyed red, and the covering of badgers' skins, and the veil of the covering;

35 The ark of the testimony, and the staves thereof, and the mercy seat;

36 The table, and all the vessels thereof, and the showbread;

37 The pure candlestick, with the lamps thereof, even with the lamps to be set in order, and all the vessels thereof, and the oil for light;

38 And the golden altar, and the anointing oil, and the sweet incense, and the hanging for the tabernacle door;

39 The brazen altar, and his grate of brass, his staves, and all his vessels, the laver and his foot;

40 The hangings of the court, his pillars, and his sockets, and the hanging for the court gate, his cords, and his pins, and all the vessels of the service of the tabernacle, for the tent of the congregation;

fine linen, for Aaron and his sons, 28 and the turban of fine linen, and the caps of fine linen, and the linen breeches of fine twined linen, 29 and the girdle of fine twined linen and of blue and purple and scarlet stuff, embroidered with needlework; as the LORD had commanded Moses.

30 And they made the plate of the holy crown of pure gold, and wrote upon it an inscription, like the engraving of a signet, "Holy to the LORD." 31 And they tied to it a lace of blue, to fasten it on the turban above; as the LORD had commanded Moses.

32 Thus all the work of the tabernacle of the tent of meeting was finished; and the people of Israel had done according to all that the LORD had commanded Moses; so had they done. 33 And they brought the tabernacle to Moses, the tent and all its utensils, its hooks, its frames, its bars, its pillars, and its bases; 34 the covering of tanned rams' skins and goatskins, and the veil of the screen; 35 the ark of the testimony with its poles and the mercy seat; 36 the table with all its utensils, and the bread of the Presence; 37 the lampstand of pure gold and its lamps with the lamps set and all its utensils, and the oil for the light; 38 the golden altar, the anointing oil and the fragrant incense, and the screen for the door of the tent; 39 the bronze altar, and its grating of bronze, its poles, and all its utensils; the laver and its base; 40 the hangings of the court, its pillars, and its bases, and the screen for the gate of the court, its cords, and its pegs; and all the utensils for the service of the tabernacle, for the tent of

15. THE PRESENTATION OF THE TABERNACLE (39:32-43)

Vss. 32-33a and 42-43 constitute the core of this section. The list of completed items brought to Moses, including as it does the golden altar and the laver and its base, must be viewed as a late addition. Two strands are also apparently combined in vss. 32-33a. The term the tabernacle of the tent of meeting (vs. 32), characteristic of PB, stands alongside the tent in vs. 33. The latter is more characteristic of PA (cf. 26:36; 29:43). The structure of vs. 33 in Hebrew suggests that the tabernacle is a later insertion. The theme of the passage is the importance of obedience.

41 The clothes of service to do service in the holy place, and the holy garments for Aaron the priest, and his sons' garments, to minister in the priest's office.

42 According to all that the LORD commanded Moses, so the children of Israel made all the work.

43 And Moses did look upon all the work, and, behold, they had done it as the LORD had commanded, even so had they done it: and Moses blessed them.

40 And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

2 On the first day of the first month shalt thou set up the tabernacle of the tent of the congregation.

3 And thou shalt put therein the ark of the testimony, and cover the ark with the veil.

4 And thou shalt bring in the table, and set in order the things that are to be set in order upon it; and thou shalt bring in the candlestick, and light the lamps thereof.

5 And thou shalt set the altar of gold for the incense before the ark of the testimony, and put the hanging of the door to the tabernacle.

6 And thou shalt set the altar of the burnt offering before the door of the tabernacle of the tent of the congregation.

7 And thou shalt set the laver between the tent of the congregation and the altar, and shalt put water therein.

8 And thou shalt set up the court round about, and hang up the hanging at the court gate.

9 And thou shalt take the anointing oil, and anoint the tabernacle, and all that is therein, and shalt hallow it, and all the vessels thereof: and it shall be holy.

10 And thou shalt anoint the altar of the burnt offering, and all his vessels, and sanctify the altar: and it shall be an altar most holy.

11 And thou shalt anoint the laver and his foot, and sanctify it.

meeting; 41 the finely worked garments for ministering in the holy place, the holy garments for Aaron the priest, and the garments of his sons to serve as priests. 42 According to all that the LORD had commanded Moses, so the people of Israel had done all the work. 43 And Moses saw all the work, and behold, they had done it; as the LORD had commanded, so had they done it. And Moses blessed them.

40 The LORD said to Moses, 2 "On the first day of the first month you shall erect the tabernacle of the tent of meeting. 3 And you shall put in it the ark of the testimony, and you shall screen the ark with the veil. 4 And you shall bring in the table, and set its arrangements in order; and you shall bring in the lampstand, and set up its lamps. 5 And you shall put the golden altar for incense before the ark of the testimony, and set up the screen for the door of the tabernacle. 6 You shall set the altar of burnt offering before the door of the tabernacle of the tent of meeting, 7 and place the laver between the tent of meeting and the altar, and put water in it. 8 And you shall set up the court round about, and hang up the screen for the gate of the court. 9 Then you shall take the anointing oil, and anoint the tabernacle and all that is in it, and consecrate it and all its furniture; and it shall become holy. 10 You shall also anoint the altar of burnt offering and all its utensils, and consecrate the altar; and the altar shall be most holy. 11 You shall also anoint the

16. THE ASSEMBLY OF THE TABERNACLE AND ITS EQUIPMENT (40:1-33)

The account of the assembly of the tabernacle and its service (vss. 16-33) is preceded by Yahweh's instructions to Moses concerning it. We are not told when or where the Lord spoke to Moses (vs. 1). Most of the instructions are actually drawn from 25:1-31:17. As in ch. 25, they begin with the ark; the manner of erecting the tabernacle itself (vss. 16-19) is not specified in this summary of the instructions. Reference to the mercy seat is also omitted (but cf. vs. 20).

12 And thou shalt bring Aaron and his sons unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and wash them with water.

13 And thou shalt put upon Aaron the holy garments, and anoint him, and sanctify him; that he may minister unto me in the priest's office.

14 And thou shalt bring his sons, and clothe them with coats:

15 And thou shalt anoint them, as thou didst anoint their father, that they may minister unto me in the priest's office: for their anointing shall surely be an everlasting priesthood throughout their generations.

16 Thus did Moses: according to all that the LORD commanded him, so did he.

17 ¶ And it came to pass in the first month in the second year, on the first day of the month, that the tabernacle was reared up.

18 And Moses reared up the tabernacle, and fastened his sockets, and set up the boards thereof, and put in the bars thereof, and reared up his pillars.

19 And he spread abroad the tent over the tabernacle, and put the covering of the tent above upon it; as the LORD commanded Moses.

20 ¶ And he took and put the testimony into the ark, and set the staves on the ark, and put the mercy seat above upon the ark:

21 And he brought the ark into the tabernacle, and set up the veil of the covering, and covered the ark of the testimony; as the LORD commanded Moses.

22 ¶ And he put the table in the tent of the congregation, upon the side of the tabernacle northward, without the veil.

23 And he set the bread in order upon it before the LORD; as the LORD had commanded Moses.

24 ¶ And he put the candlestick in the tent of the congregation, over against the table, on the side of the tabernacle southward.

25 And he lighted the lamps before the LORD; as the LORD commanded Moses.

26 ¶ And he put the golden altar in the tent of the congregation before the veil:

27 And he burnt sweet incense thereon; as the LORD commanded Moses.

28 ¶ And he set up the hanging at the door of the tabernacle.

laver and its base, and consecrate it. 12 Then you shall bring Aaron and his sons to the door of the tent of meeting, and shall wash them with water, 13 and put upon Aaron the holy garments, and you shall anoint him and consecrate him, that he may serve me as priest. 14 You shall bring his sons also and put coats on them, 15 and anoint them, as you anointed their father, that they may serve me as priests: and their anointing shall admit them to a perpetual priesthood throughout their generations."

16 Thus did Moses; according to all that the LORD commanded him, so he did. 17 And in the first month in the second year, on the first day of the month, the tabernacle was erected. 18 Moses erected the tabernacle; he laid its bases, and set up its frames, and put in its poles, and raised up its pillars; 19 and he spread the tent over the tabernacle, and put the covering of the tent over it, as the LORD had commanded Moses. 20 And he took the testimony and put it into the ark, and put the poles on the ark, and set the mercy seat above on the ark; 21 and he brought the ark into the tabernacle, and set up the veil of the screen, and screened the ark of the testimony; as the LORD had commanded Moses. 22 And he put the table in the tent of meeting, on the north side of the tabernacle, outside the veil, 23 and set the bread in order on it before the LORD; as the LORD had commanded Moses. 24 And he put the lampstand in the tent of meeting, opposite the table on the south side of the tabernacle, 25 and set up the lamps before the LORD; as the LORD had commanded Moses. 26 And he put the golden altar in the tent of meeting before the veil, 27 and burnt fragrant incense upon it; as the LORD had commanded Moses. 28 And he put in place the 29 And he put the altar of burnt offering by the door of the tabernacle of the tent of the congregation, and offered upon it the burnt offering and the meat offering; as the LORD commanded Moses.

30 ¶ And he set the laver between the tent of the congregation and the altar, and put water there, to wash withal.

31 And Moses and Aaron and his sons washed their hands and their feet thereat:

32 When they went into the tent of the congregation, and when they came near unto the altar, they washed; as the LORD commanded Moses.

33 And he reared up the court round about the tabernacle and the altar, and set up the hanging of the court gate. So Moses finished the work.

34 ¶ Then a cloud covered the tent of the congregation, and the glory of the LORD filled the tabernacle.

35 And Moses was not able to enter into the tent of the congregation, because the cloud abode thereon, and the glory of the LORD filled the tabernacle.

36 And when the cloud was taken up from over the tabernacle, the children of Israel went onward in all their journeys:

37 But if the cloud were not taken up, then they journeyed not till the day that it was taken up.

38 For the cloud of the LORD was upon the tabernacle by day, and fire was on it by screen for the door of the tabernacle. 29 And he set the altar of burnt offering at the door of the tabernacle of the tent of meeting, and offered upon it the burnt offering and the cereal offering; as the LORD had commanded Moses. 30 And he set the laver between the tent of meeting and the altar, and put water in it for washing, 31 with which Moses and Aaron and his sons washed their hands and their feet; 32 when they went into the tent of meeting, and when they approached the altar, they washed; as the LORD commanded Moses. 33 And he erected the court round the tabernacle and the altar, and set up the screen of the gate of the court. So Moses finished the work.

34 Then the cloud covered the tent of meeting, and the glory of the LORD filled the tabernacle. 35 And Moses was not able to enter the tent of meeting, because the cloud abode upon it, and the glory of the LORD filled the tabernacle. 36 Throughout all their journeys, whenever the cloud was taken up from over the tabernacle, the people of Israel would go onward; 37 but if the cloud was not taken up, then they did not go onward till the day that it was taken up. 38 For throughout all their journeys the cloud of the LORD was upon the tabernacle

17. CONCLUSION (40:34-38)

The heart of this conclusion, and its oldest portion, is found in vss. 34-35. These reiterate the main theme of P with respect to the tabernacle: it is the symbol of the relationship of grace in which Israel stands to a transcendent deity. The phrase the glory of the LORD filled the tabernacle occurs twice. The conclusion stresses the interior of the structure and uses the temple as its model. From that model, too, is derived the notion that Moses could not enter the tabernacle because of the glory (cf. I Kings 8:10-11), a note which contradicts the general outlook of P (25:22; 29:43-46; Lev. 9:23). This close 40:38. The Tokens of the Presence.—So the book of Exodus ends in glory with the descent of the presence of the Most High upon the house built by the skill and devotion of all the people. This is the fulfillment of the promise of 25:8, "Let them make me a sanctuary; that I may dwell among them." The people have done their part; now God does his part, and the cloud . . . by day and the fire . . . by night testify that he is indeed living among them.

The presence of God is for most men a dim and faltering consciousness flickering in vague waves of feeling or in tenuous experiences admitting no objective proof. We say his hand is felt, his voice is heard. But the moment is fleeting, and there are long days of waiting for the chance that his quickening spirit may visit us again. Sustained by nothing but that faint hope, how little we have to carry us over those barren hours of doubt and worldliness and despair!

But in the sacraments, as in the tabernacle, we find the orderliness of a father's love who night, in the sight of all the house of Israel, throughout all their journeys.

by day, and fire was in it by night, in the sight of all the house of Israel.

association of the tabernacle with the Solomonic temple is characteristic of PB. On the other hand, PA thinks of the tabernacle as a tent and draws on the ancient tent of Moses (33:7-11) as its model.

has given us regular outward signs of a continuous inner peace. Within, we may not be able except at rare moments to be sure that he is with us. But without, the table of the Holy Communion is always set. At noonday in the midst of men's business a cloud hovers above the place of God; in the darkest, loneliest night there is the glow of his presence. The door to the inner, unseen world opens to those who follow the visible signposts God places before their feet throughout all their journeys.

St. Augustine says, at first the scriptures will amuse and attract the child, and in the end, when he tries to understand them, they make fools of the wise, for none is so simple-minded but can find his level there nor none so wise but when he tries to fathom them will find they are beyond his depth.*

* Pfeiffer, Meister Eckhart, I, 257.

MEDITERRANEAN SEA

• Gaza

PLAIN OF SHARON

• Beer-sheba

Mt. Carmel

• Tyre

• Sidon

• Hebron

VALLEY OF JEZREEL

• Samaria

Mt. Lebanon

• Jerusalem

Mt. Gerizim

Mt. Ebal

Mt. Gilboa

• Dan

SEA OF CHINNERETH

Mt. Hermon

• Jericho

Jordan River

SALT SEA

Mt. Nebo

• Ramoth-gilead

Damascus

• Rabbath-ammon

N

PALESTINE
in Old Testament Times

E. LOWENSTEIN

UNIVERSAL LIBRARY

132 367

UNIVERSAL
LIBRARY